HARMON ATTACKS PRESIDENT'S POLICY ON TARIFF

"For a President to Defeat the Action of Congress and Mandate of People Is Departure From Constitution"—Harmon

GOVERNOR JUDSON HARMON of Ohio was about the only Democrat in Boston who wasn't bitterly disappointed at the fate of the City Committee barbecue yesterday.

"I am a Baptist, and the son of a Baptist minister, and I am not afraid of a little water," explained the Ohio governor. "Besides I am getting a chance to speak in Faneuil Hall, and though I have often spoken under the trees, I never before had an opportunity to stand before an audience in the Cradle of Liberty."

There were about 300 wet Democrats in the Cradle of Liberty with the Governor. Their umbrellas caused little rivulets to flow upon the sacred floor. But they were enthusiastic Democrats or they wouldn't have been there and they gave the Ohioan a magnificent reception.

After they had cheered for five minutes a man with a goatee who came from Rhode Island and occupied a seat at the back of the platform leaped upon his chair and cried:

Governor Foss Applauds.

They came freely and Governor Foss, whom they do say would like to be the next President himself clapped his hands nobly.

The barbecue did not happen because the Charles River was flowing over part of Cohasset Grove where it was to have taken place and the solid ground was very muddy. Besides it was raining. The City Committee had Governor Harmon and a 3,000 word speech on their hands and thought they could postpone the barbecue for two weeks until September 23, they couldn't postpone the Governor.

Therefore all the spell-binders were notified to turn up at Faneuil Hall at 4:30, and the ward leaders were notified to provide an audience. They did nobly. The hall wasn't crowded, but it was comfortably filled, and every guest had leather lungs.

About 5 o'clock the party began. Governor Foss, Governor Harmon, Major Fitzgerald, the twin Congressmen Curley and Murray, Lewis A. Waterman, Democratic candidate for Governor of Rhode Island, a delegation of fifty Rhode Island politicians who came to Boston expecting to have a good time at the barbecue, Joe Maynard, chairman of the City Committee, and the usual collection of platform occupants at Democratic rallies filed in.

Fitz was chairman and made an address. Did he talk about his trip to Europe? Yes. Do what was going to happen to the Republicans this Fall.

Next came Governor Foss. "I don't care who the Republicans nominate or what their platform is. We will surely win."

The Governor then introduced Governor Harmon, but Major Fitz bobbed up and said, "Not Yet."

Tom Giblin There With Cheers.

He introduced Mr. Waterman of Rhode Island and Harmon settled back in his chair.

Mr. Waterman said that he was going to beat the Republicans in Rhode Island, and there was great applause. Tom Giblin of East Boston, who occupied a seat in the audience because the platform was overcrowded, arose every now and then and called for three cheers for something or other.

Then the Mayor introduced Governor Harmon. The Ohio Governor is a gentleman of pleasant manners and very magnetic in conversation. His hair is silver and his closely cropped mustache not quite so white.

It was now 6:30 and a part of the audience proceeded to beat it, despite the protests of Mayor Fitzgerald, who said he had several other interesting speakers

$150,000 FIRE IN GARAGE; 50 AUTOS ARE BURNED

Skinner's Automobile Establishment Ablaze Early This Morning; Two Alarms Calls All Down Town Apparatus.

Owner Estimates Loss to Building and Fifty Autos and Other Contents at Over $50,000—Blaze in Heart of Back Bay.

A TWO alarm fire early this morning destroyed the Kenneth A. Skinner Automobile garage on Stanhope street, in the Back Bay and threatened the destruction of other large structures in the vicinity.

A large number of automobiles stored in the garage were destroyed by the flames before the firemen could get effective streams of water playing on the fire.

The fire spread rapidly, and in a few minutes the entire building occupied by the garage, about 150 feet long, was in flames. Gasoline stored inside in small cans was ignited and set the flames scattering in all directions. In a short time it was apparent that the garage building was doomed.

The loss was estimated by Mr. Skinner at $150,000. In the garage were stored ten of his own machines and forty-five private automobiles. These machines were valued at from $1,000 to $10,000 apiece and all were destroyed.

Flames mounted several hundred feet in the air. The burned autos and oil gave rise to volumes of thick smoke.

Other garages in the vicinity were threatened. At one time it looked as if the big Youth's Companion building on Columbus avenue in the immediate rear of the garage would be burned.

During the fire there were several explosions of hot air and gasoline. A great crowd gathered after the flames broke out. The light from the fire was visible from all parts of the city.

These explosions made the work of the firemen exceedingly hazardous. The heat from the flames was so intense that Fire Chief Mullen had to issue orders to his men to keep well away from the burning structure.

OFF FOR HEARST FLIGHT.

The motors which the youthful aviator will use on the various stages of his flight will be distributed along the route by the middle of the week.

INEZ SPRAGUE FLEES TITLED FRENCHMEN

RIVALS READY TO FIGHT

Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, Sept. 9.—Mrs. Inez Sprague Stiness, whose divorce was announced exclusively by the International News Service ten days ago, left unexpectedly to-day by the Lorraine for New York. The reason of the rush is to avoid the importunities of two titled foreigners who have been pressing their suits almost tragically since the divorce.

The suitors are Marquis De Villeneuve and Count D'Avenel. The marquis, a hero of the Boer War, has thrown up a government position in Indo-China to seek the hand of the beautiful daughter of former Governor Sprague of Rhode Island. He is thirty years old, while his rival, the Count, is only twenty-two. The marquis belongs to a family so distinguished that its members were the only ones permitted to wear their hats in the presence of royalty.

Duel Is Threatened.

When Mrs. Stanislas Bonde, mother of Inez Sprague Stiness, heard that the whole property of the Marquis consisted of a ramshackle chateau and a jewelled sword presented him by President Kruger, she ordered her daughter back to America.

Immediately the Marquis and the Count met at Saint Lazare station to see her off. Angry words and an exchange of cards passed between them as the train steamed out of the station, and a duel is expected. To the AMERICAN'S correspondent, Mrs. Stiness said:

"Husbands All Failures."

"I don't want another husband, anyway. Husbands are necessary all failures. I can have a better time without them. Husbands are bores. In England they want us to unite their shootings in France they want our money. In America they think we ought to be satisfied when they present us a cheque book.

"I prefer an aeroplane to a husband and I am going to take up aviation. We should have a women's fleet of airships in America as they are having in France."

Mrs. Stiness was accompanied to the Governor, Mrs. Sprague and baby Stiness. Duchess Anna Gould de Talleyrand did her utmost to make a marriage between Mrs. Stiness and Villeneuve, the latter being a cousin of De Talleyrand.

Wireless Message Comes to Sunday American From the Distinguished Voyager From Far Out on the Atlantic.

ARCHBISHOP O'CONNELL, who went from Boston to Europe last May in search of needed rest and relaxation, is nearing the New England coast on his homeward voyage.

Last night a wireless message, sent through the air from off the coast of Nova Scotia, was received by the Sunday AMERICAN in response to a wireless greeting sent to the distinguished passenger of the Kroonland.

The reply of the Archbishop is a message of love to all. He gives thanks for the friendly message sent to him and sends the cheering and welcome news that he is completely benefitted by his rest abroad and is now anxious for home and friends.

It is a message that will be welcomed by all citizens of Boston who honor his sender as not only a great leader of his own church, but an illustrous citizen of Boston who never fails to talk and act in the best interests of his beloved city.

But in deference to his expressed wishes, he will be permitted to come to Boston quietly and without public reception of any kind.

Illinois Central Shopmen Told to Be Ready to Quit.

CHICAGO, Sept. 9.—Aside from the announcement that Illinois Central shopmen had been informed by their union heads to hold themselves in readiness for a strike, there is no development in the railroad labor situation here. Union officials maintained that the issuance of the ordering to the employes did not necessarily portend a strike, but inasmuch as a walk-out is a possibility they thought it best to have the men in a state of preparedness. The situation will be discussed thoroughly Sunday by the international committee, when it is expected some definite action will be taken.

50 INJURED IN CRASH.

Two Will Die Following Car Collision at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—Fifty or more persons were injured to-night at the Benning race track when a street car ran into the rear of another car which was filled with excursionists from Chesapeake Beach. Five of the injured excursionists are seriously injured and two will die.

TAFT TO ADVOCATE REFORM IN DIVORCE

On Western Tour President Will Urge Uniform Laws In States.

President Taft hopes to appear before the country as a teacher and as an expounder of moral questions in his speaking tour through the West which starts this week.

Although it is conceded that the President will talk politics when a good opportunity presents itself it became known yesterday he will also discuss a great number of questions which he considers affecting the welfare of the people at large without regard to their political views.

The President plans in this connection to take the opportunity to express himself emphatically on the question of marriage and divorce. He has very strong convictions on the existing divorce situation in the United States and believes that there is imperative need for a remedy in that direction. The President will urge the adoption of uniform laws regarding marriage and divorce by the separate States, so that it will be impossible for a man forbidden to marry in one State to avoid the decree by stepping across the border line into another State. The States should respect the decree issued by the courts of any one State in his opinion.

The President believes this remedy can be effectually applied as the States have already succeeded in agreeing upon uniform laws affecting certain classes of business transactions.

The President plans to address the country on the conservation of the soil, the parcels post and how to get it, the Monroe doctrine, and relations with Central and South America, the Panama Canal, and the rate to be established for ships using the canal, for the fortification of the canal, economy in the government service and other topics of a similar nature.

MUST REPORT ACCIDENTS.

Workmen's Compensation Act to Be Rigidly Enforced.

The workmen's compensation act is to be rigidly enforced from now on, according to a statement issued by the Commission on Compensation to-day. The Commission warns employers of labor who neglect to report within forty-eight hours all accidents that have happened to their employes during work will be subjected to a fine of $50 for each offence.

The Commission discovered that several manufacturing establishments throughout the State have disregarded the provisions of the act by failing to report accidents. The Commission is convinced that the only way it will be able to bring these manufacturers to terms is by prosecution.

DANISH PRINCE COMING.

Christian of Denmark to Visit Boston After Tour.

Crown Prince Christian of Denmark will visit Boston this Fall. An elaborate program has been arranged for his entertainment by Gustaf Lundberge, Danish consul to Boston. Prince Christian will be the first member of the Danish royal house to visit this city. The Prince and his party will come to the United States after a tour of the Danish West Indies. He will be officially welcomed in Washington by the President. He will then visit New York, Newport and Boston.

AMERICAN'S STRAW VOTE ON MAINE LIQUOR LAW INDICATES A DEFEAT FOR PROHIBITION

Careful and Important Canvass Covering the Entire State Points to Decisive Victory for the License Forces in the Election on Monday; Organizations Perfected for Closing Work to Decide Great Issue

Most Spectacular Campaign in History of the State Closes with Both Sides Determined to Bring Out Its Entire Voting Strength at the Polls; Big Surprise Revealed in Repeal Sentiment in Towns

THE Sunday AMERICAN has taken a straw poll of representative districts in Maine to learn the attitude of the voters on the question of constitutional prohibition, which they will decide to-morrow. The poll indicates that prohibition will be defeated. The AMERICAN gives the "straw ballot" as its reporters obtained it after a most careful investigation.

The figures secured in the poll indicate that if the same percentage holds good throughout Maine as was shown in the sections covered by the AMERICAN'S "straw vote," prohibition will be defeated by the astonishing majority of 24,452 votes for the repeal of the prohibitory amendment.

The "straw vote" was taken in various places in Maine. Everywhere the poll appeared to show majorities favoring the anti-prohibitionists.

According to the figures resulting from computations based on percentages secured in the "straw ballot," Maine's vote to-morrow will be approximately:

For "Yes" (Repeal)	81,504
For "No" (Constitutional Prohibition)	57,052
Majority for "Yes" (Repeal)	24,452

For "Yes"	28,845
For "No"	14,343
Majority for "Yes"	14,502

In the towns and rural districts the poll indicates the following surprising totals:

For "Yes"	52,659
For "No"	42,709
Majority for "Yes"	9,950

This majority of nearly 10,000 for the repeal in the towns and rural districts is one of the most remarkable things the poll has brought out. Both pros and antis in Maine have admitted that the result hinges on the vote of the farmers.

In the cities the "straw ballot" indicates there may be a 2 to 1 vote for taking the prohibitory amendment out of the constitution. Basing the calculations on last year's vote, which in the opinion of "Cider State" politicians is likely to be duplicated or even surpassed to-morrow, the poll shows a majority for "yes" in the cities of slightly above 14,500.

WHAT THE POLL IN CITIES SHOWS.

The poll taken by the AMERICAN indicates there will be large majorities in all the Maine cities for repeal. The "straw vote" indicates a 511 majority for "yes" in Augusta. In Bangor the poll shows there may be an almost 3 to 1 vote for repeal.

The proportion is not so high in some of the other cities. Lewiston, however, according to the "straw ballot," indicates a more than 3 to 1 vote for repeal. In Portland it looks as if the vote may be about 3 to 2 to rescind the prohibitory amendment.

Figures based on the AMERICAN'S poll for several of the Maine cities follow:

In Augusta:
For "Yes"	1,332
For "No"	1,021
Majority in Augusta for "Yes"	311
In Bangor:
For "Yes"	3,525
For "No"	773
Majority in Bangor for "Yes"	2,752
In Lewiston:
For "Yes"	2,913
For "No"	942
Majority in Lewiston for "Yes"	1,971
In Portland:
For "Yes"	6,603
For "No"	4,241
Majority in Portland for "Yes"	1,810

Vote at Lewiston Fair.

A poll taken by an AMERICAN reporter during the State Fair at Lewiston apparently verifies in a striking way the totals given above of the approximate State vote to-morrow. The gathering at the fair where this "straw vote" was taken may be considered not only as representative of the southern Androscoggin County, but of all Maine, as the attendance was made up of city, town and country people from all over the State. This poll at the fair, carefully made among 600 voters, gave the following result:

For "Yes"	230
For "No"	140
Doubtful	60

This gives a percentage of 58.8 for "Yes." Using this percentage, the following totals for the State-wide vote can be deduced on the basis of the Lewiston fair "straw vote":

For "Yes"	81,471
For "No"	57,085
Majority for "Yes"	24,386

This figure based on the Lewiston fair poll runs close to the State-wide majority based on the poll of representative districts by the Sunday AMERICAN. But even at that the figure is large and is far over the most sanguine expectations of the anti leaders. The percentages in the poll of the representative districts were used with the election figures of last Fall's great gubernatorial campaign, in order to arrive at an approximate estimate of what tomorrow's vote may look like.

Antis Explain Vote.

Last year with Governor Plaisted opposing the Bleker-Fernald machine and with prohibition as one of the most important planks in the Democratic platform, the vote was large. It may be that the vote to-morrow will be smaller. Even so, if a margin brought out in the straw vote is maintained, the same proportion will hold, though the State-wide majority will be trimmed to a lesser total.

And yet the 24,000 as the State's majority for "Yes" appears large. However, it should be recalled that Twenty-five years ago when the prohibitory amendment was placed in the constitution, Maine gave the pros a majority of 44,383 for the amendment. Every county in the State gave a majority for Prohibition at that time, and the amendment got in through the work of the Democrats, who are now almost solid—probably about 90 per cent. of the party strength—for repeal.

It is to be remembered also that possibly 30 per cent of the Republican strength of the State this is the prediction of a prominent Maine Republican—will vote with the bulk of the Democratic party to-morrow. Reasons like these have been adduced by Maine progressivators to explain why they look for a majority for repeal of anywhere from 10,000 or 12,000 to 20,000.

In taking its poll the Sunday AMERICAN aimed first of all at accuracy. Every effort possible was made to get a truthful expression as to how the voter intended to mark his ballot when he went into the voting booth. Representative sections were canvassed. No pressure was brought to bear on the men approached either to have them vote [illegible]

AMERICAN'S POLL IN MAINE'S BIG LIQUOR WAR

Thorough Canvass in All Sections of State Indicate Defeat for Prohibition

ler war or to vote at all. There were numbers that would not say how they would vote. To-day the AMERICAN gives its readers the results of the "straw vote."

It seems to be a significent fact that everywhere there was a margin for "Yes" over "No." It was the AMERICAN'S aim to arrange the taking of the poll in such a way as to make the ballots as nearly representative of population in the districts as possible.

In Augusta, for instance, 263 voters were seen. Of these 111 were for "Yes," 74 for "No," 78 were doubtful. At Lewiston 200 voters were approached. Of this number 130 said they would vote for repeal, there were 42 "Noes" and 28 were doubtful. At Portland 127 voters were seen. As in all other districts visited, this list comprised members of the professions, business men and others. Of the 127 seen 60 were "Yes" men, 42 were for "No" and 25 were doubtful or non-committal.

At Bangor the repeal sentiment was surprisingly strong. Out of 642 voters talked with, 527 declared they will vote "Yes", while 115 said they will cross off the "No" square on the ballot to-morrow. Here is how the Bangor canvass resulted:

Bangor Shoe Company's crew, Yes, 48, No, 8; Morse & Company lumber mills, Yes, 97, No, 23; Union Iron Works, Yes, 41, No, 9; Maine Central freight sheds, Yes, 8, No, 3; R. B. Dunning Company, Yes, 9, No, 3; T. R. Savage Company, Yes, 13, No, 7; Thurston & Kingsbury, Yes, 6, No, 3; Rice & Miller Company, Yes, 9, No, 5; Day Spring Bed Company, Yes, 11, No, 4; Penobscot Machinery Company, Yes, 7, No, 3; Haynes & Chalmers Company, Yes, 15, No, 3; Bangor House Employees, Yes, 22, No, 2; a Theatre audience, Yes, 192, No, 34; a street car, Yes, 18, No, 5; a Publishing house, Yes, 31, No, 3.

In another twenty-four hours the last speaker will have pleaded for prohibition, the last editorial gun will have boomed, the pamphleteering will be over and Maine will be in the spotlight with practically two continents playing the part of spectators, while all over the State the voters will be bound for the polling places where they are to cast the ballots in the special election which is to decide whether or not Maine is to retain the prohibitory amendment in its Constitution.

It will be the close of the most remarkable campaign in the Pine Tree State's history, and the most vital in the history of the prohibition movement. And some time after the booths are closed at 5 o'clock to-morrow afternoon—perhaps not before noon Tuesday—there will be flashed forth the result. Whatever it is—and the best that is said by the unbiased foreshadowers is that the issue is in doubt—it will be momentous for the prohibitionists. On the outcome, according to many, hinges the fate of prohibition in other States.

Both sides are claiming the victory already. Nought else was to be expected. The anti-prohibitionists will win by more than 10,000 votes. So they say. The other side is just as confident it will win, though the politicians who are aligned up in the fight to keep Maine as it has been for the past quarter of century trim their margin to a small figure and feel they can squeeze through to-morrow's ordeal with a win and upward of 1,600 votes to spare.

To-day the fighters for prohibition up in Maine are putting forth their bravest showing. All over the State rallies are held, children are parading, pastors are preaching, speakers of note are talking, all in a last effort to clinch the situation and get the voters. The antis are not so active, having mailed out their last ton of literature and now being content to rest on their oars.

And in the meantime the voters have made up their minds, most of them, perhaps the great majority, months ago. To-morrow they will cross off one of two little squares on the ballot. The one is marked "Yes," and the other "No." It is the first time in the State's history that the voters will have had to choose between two simple words to get at a result of so far-reaching importance. Maine may slide, but then, again, it may stick.

All sorts of predictions are being made as to the vote. Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, head of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and foremost in the fight to keep the State as it is, believes it will be an emphatic "No" that the voters at the polls will voice forth to-morrow. Her estimate is a majority for retention of from 15,000 to 20,000.

TO BE LARGEST IN YEARS.

26th Convention of American Federation Opens Next Week.

Final arrangements for the twenty-sixth annual convention of the Massachusetts State Branch of the A. F. of L., which will convene at Haverhill one week from to-morrow, were completed at a meeting of the executive committee at Wells Memorial Building last evening.

The convention this year, the members of the committee state, will be larger than for several years past, 152 credentials having been received to date. It also was said that each delegate in attendance would be furnished with an advance copy of the officers' reports, an innovation in State Branch procedure. The following delegates were named to serve as a credential committee:

John J. Kearney of the Boston Waiters' Union, T. J. Minihan of the Boston Milk Wagon Drivers' Union, M. T. Joyce of the Boston Electrical Workers' Union, W. F. Goldthwaite of the Haverhill Shoe Workers' Union, and M. W. Stevenson of the Lawrence Painters' Union.

The committee decided on the Arlington Hotel as the official headquarters during convention week.

GIBLIN TALKS TO MAYOR.

East Boston Leader Wants Action On Crossings.

Former Alderman Thomas J. Giblin of East Boston asked Mayor Fitzgerald yesterday to take up with the corporation counsel the matter of filing a petition in the Superior Court accepting the decree of the Railroad Commission ordering the grade crossing to be abolished at Orient Heights and Harbor View. The Mayor agreed to talk the matter over with President Melvin O. Adams of the Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad, and the corporation counsel of Boston on Tuesday next.

Mr. Giblin said that three weeks ago his five year old son Edmund came near being killed at the Orient Height crossing. He mentioned other accidents to prove his contention that the crossings should be done away with as soon as possible.

Eddy Will Case Up Monday.

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 9.—The hearing in the Mary Baker G. Eddy contested will case will be resumed next Monday before Solicitor Clifford. At that time the examination of former United States Senator William E. Chandler will be continued. It is expected that the greater part of the day will be taken up by the cross-examination, which is to be conducted by General Streeter.

CONGRESSMAN R. P. HOBSON HOPEFUL OF VICTORY FOR PROHIBITION FORCES IN MAINE'S CAMPAIGN

Alabama Congressman Tells of Contest Against Repeal of Amendment.

Says Results of Election Will Be Felt All Over the World.

R. P. HOBSON

©J. E. PURDY, BOSTON.

CAPT. R. P. HOBSON

By RICHMOND P. HOBSON.

Written Expressly for the Sunday American.

MAINE is stirred from centre to circumference. Old residents say that in the long annals of the old State there has never been a campaign so all-absorbing. Under the direction of the National and State W. C. T. U., forty-five thousand young campaigners, an army of "children militant," and probably 90 per cent. of all the women in the State are working for prohibition and pleading with the men to vote "No" against the repeal of the present constitutional amendment. If such election were decided by all the people—that is, by population—prohibition would carry over three to one.

Alongside of the women of the State are strong, talented, devoted women sent in from other States, from all parts of the country, holding meetings in churches, schoolhouses, town halls and out in the open, pleading and exhorting for the cause.

The International Sunday School Association has appointed September 10 for special observance for prayer for Maine, and all over this country and in every part of the civilized world special services will be held in churches and prayers ascend for Divine help in the battle of Monday. Messages of "God speed" have come in from distinguished scientists, statesmen, reformers and temperance societies of Great Britain and her colonies, of France, Germany, Austria, Belgium, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. On the other hand it is freely stated that, as in the constitutional fight in Alabama and Texas, the liquor forces from the outside are sending into the State unlimited money and unlimited rum to help the "Yes" vote, from St. Louis, Milwaukee, New York, Boston, from Canada and Europe.

Work of Liquor Interests.

The practical work of the liquor forces is being conducted by the "Non-Partisan Local Self-Government League," with headquarters in Augusta and Portland. They have a veritable army of "canvassers" in the field, "working" day and night on the individual voters, many appearing in the guise of agents and commercial travelers, using and preparing to further use the "materials" supplied them. They send out literature by the hundreds of thousands of copies to the individual voters, and in the same way send their organ, the Bulletin, established for this campaign.

Though they put no speakers in the field, their method, with unlimited money, is a formidable and a dangerous one. For many months they have prepared the ground for making their grim appeal for a change by using every means at their command, including their two special "materials" to discredit the present system of prohibition, setting up against it a form of local option.

This is the more dangerous, since most of the voters of Maine have never known or never seen local option in operation in this State or elsewhere.

The detailed work of the prohibition side is directed by the "Christian Civic League of Maine" and the "No License League" with headquarters in Portland and Augusta. This method is the usual one, using speakers, literature, and posters and depending on local organizations. In my judgment they are weak as compared to their opponents in the matter of reaching the individual voters, for they do not command a great body of workers directed from a central headquarters, and do not use the mails as much, relying largely upon hand distribution of literature and discrimination of information by speakers, not fully appreciating that the opposition can meet this by keeping their supporters away from meetings. It is nevertheless true that the meetings are largely and enthusiastic and the number of speakers the largest that has ever come into this State or into any State, and the vote "No" work with individual voters is becoming more careful and effective as the campaign draws to a close.

Under these circumstances, with such entirely different methods adopted on the two sides, it is difficult to forecast the outcome.

In a general way, I would estimate that the fight is more difficult, and the prohibition vote will be reduced since the campaign of 1884 about in the proportion that the population of cities and towns has grown upon the population of the country districts.

I think this will be generally true, though it is likely that surprises will be recorded in localities where the country vote may go wet where not expected and the town vote may go dry, the former resulting from fooling the farmer though individual work in back districts, reached only by the mails and by paid canvassers.

In 1884 about 66 per cent. of the population of Maine was rural. To-day only about 53 per cent. is rural. The excess of rural population over urban in 1884 was about 32 per cent. of the total. The excess to-day is only about 6 per cent.

I would estimate therefore, that the majority for prohibition in this section could not be expected to be more than one-fifth to one-sixth of the majority in 1884. This would give a maximum prohibition majority of about 7,500.

Far Reaching Effect.

Which ever way the result turns Monday, the effect of this campaign of 1911, in the second battle of Maine, will be far-reaching, affecting the whole future policy of temperance in America and in the whole world. I forecast that the objective of temperance hereafter will pass up from State lines to national lines and that from Maine the forces will begin to work upon Washington, to put prohibition into the Constitution of the United States. Upon the convening of Congress, I intend to introduce a joint resolution for the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States under which the sale and manufacture for sale of beverage containing alcohol will be forever prohibited in the United States and its possessions. With the proper co-operation of all the States and the constitution of the available forces of the nation, submission and ratification by 1920, the 300th anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers.

The constitutions of individual States and the constitution of the United States, the organic laws of America, are the proper abiding places for laws treating their great organic disease. Following in the path of America, the people of other lands will no doubt put prohibition into their organic laws, and new milestones, like Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights, will rise to inaugurate new organic laws and insure the security of many new peoples in their rights, their lives and liberties, now menaced by the Great Destroyer.

I forecast that the liquor forces in precipitating this assault on the citadel of prohibition will really start the march of a great crusade that will circle th earth and place prohibition in the organic law of the world.

This march of events has been inevitable since science, within the last two decades in the laboratories of the world, has established the real nature of alcohol, that it is a toxin, the waste product of the ferment or yeast germ, and consequently must at all times and under all circumstances be found a poison to every living tissue of an order of life higher than the yeast germ.

This settles the point as to whether alcohol has food value. It can have no food value and experiments show that even the small quantity of alcohol contained in one glass of malt beer will poison the system to the extent of lowering the efficiency on an average of 8 per cent. for 24 hours. Moreover, as a toxin alcohol can have no medicinal value.

Instead of being a stimulant it has been found to be a narcotic and attacks like a poison every tissue and every organ, one drink being sufficient to paralyze, as in a drunken stuper, all the white blood corpuscles in the body, and while thus drunk these warriors, the body's army of defence, cannot destroy the disease germs that come in through the air breathed, the water drunk and the food eaten, and through abrasions of the skin. Investigation has shown that this lowering of the powers of defence of so many of our people is the cause of forty-four per cent. of all deaths that occur, causing alcohol thus to slaughter about 700,000 Americans annually, or at the rate of 2,000 Americans every day that the sun rises, shortening the lives of 1,000,000 confirmed drunkards to about three years, on the average, and 4,000,000 heavy drinkers to about eight or nine years, on the average, and cutting out about thirteen years from the lives of 23,000,000 Americans who drink alcoholic beverage every day of their lives.

The Victims of Alcohol.

Thus the killed by alcohol amounts to 700,000 Americans in one year and the killed in both of all the wars of the world have been but 700,000 in 2,300 years. The wounded list of alcohol to-day stands at 28,000,000 Americans and the wounded in battle of all the wars of the world have been but 2,000,000.

Such appalling figures at once show that the distribution of this poison is not an incidental local option for police regulation, city by city, or county by county, but is a deep matter properly belonging to the organic law of society and nations and ultimately of the world.

The most startling result of the scientific investigations known, is that this poison has a terrific effect upon the tender cells associated with evolution, actually wiping them out in the order in which they were established. Man is evolving along the line of mind, especially in the adding from generation to generation of little cells of grey matter, on the surface of the brain, especially that part of the seat of the moral character.

Then a man who drinks gradually wipes out the cells he has caused to be added to his own life, then the cells added in the generation of his father and mother, and then in turn then added in the generation of his grandparents and his ancestors. In a short time, a red man is thrown down to a savage, a blackman to a cannibal. In a few years the highest type of a white man, from being tender-hearted, becomes a murderer, from a man of honor to a man without moral sense, from a loving husband and parent to a brute, cruel to his own flesh and blood.

Because of this revising of her evolutionary processes and purposes, nature not only strikes down the individual, but strikes at the offspring so as not to perpetuate and multiply degeneracy. Scientific investigations show that.

If parents are total abstaining, no matter how hard their lots may be, they will have no danger attending the birth of their children; that nine out of ten of the children will be absolutely normal and the tenth one only backward. But if the parents are temperate, regular drinkers, the accidents go up 525 per cent., the dangers and sufferings of birth in proportion, and the number of their children that die in infancy will be nearly doubled.

If the parents are alcoholic, one child out of every five will become insane, one out of three epileptics or hysterical, and about three-fourths of all the children will be tainted with degeneracy.

These terrific facts show not only that the only rational life for the individual, man or woman, is a life of absolute total abstinence, but that the question of drinking and the distribution of this toxin becomes the most vital organic matter for the consideration of the State, the nation and the race.

Liquor a Gold Mine.

As a nation proceeds toward the preponderance of city life, the population becoming more and more dense, the profits in the liquor traffic become greater and greater, till in great cities it is a veritable gold mine. When country life preponderates, the people, as a whole, do not degenerate, and following the laws of nature, large families, each generation higher and nobler than the previous, they build the nation's greatness; but when city life comes to preponderate, the bulk of the people drink, degeneracy begins, children of the next generation are abnormal. Soon, in the few generations, the nation rests on degeneracy, its institutions are shattered, and when struck by a great shock from without the nation falls. The great governments of Europe have come to realize that it was not war that destroyed the nations of history that perished, but this great internal destroyer.

In 1850 over 85 per cent. of all American citizens were engaged in agricultural pursuits and the consumption of alcoholic beverage per capita was four gallons, confined chiefly to strong drink in a small number. To-day less than 30 per cent. of our people are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and the consumption of alcoholic beverage is 25 gallons for every man, woman and child, with 28,000,000 of our citizens taking it in some form every day of their lives.

Degeneracy is already beginning to flood our great cities as young as they are. Our nation has reached the period of city life. If nothing is done in a few generations the nation will rest on degeneracy, the electorate will become purchasable, our liberties will perish and in time when struck from within the nation will fall.

HARMON SPEAKS TO BOSTON DEMOCRATS

who would only talk three minutes each. Thereupon he introduced Congressman George O'Shaunessy of Rhode Island.

O'Shaunessy was the biggest man on the platform and when he passed the three minutes nobody dared to stop him. He talked for thirty-five minutes, while Dave Walsh of Clinton, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, twisted around on the platform and wondered if he would ever get a chance to say a word. It was hard lines for Dave, because he had sent out a classy speech to the papers.

O'Shaunessy was a real orator and he had the audience in tears over the extravagance of the Republicans in Congress. Why, they were paying a door-keeper in Congress $1,200 a year for an assistant. It turned out that the assistant was his daughter who of course never came near the Halls of Congress.

Murray Stayed Three Minutes.

After the Rhode Island man had concluded, Fitz decided to take no more chances with orators. "Here is Congressman William F. Murray, who just wants to say 'how de do.'"

Congressman Murray wanted to say a lot more than that, but he sized up the audience and delivered a three minute speech.

The Mayor took pity on David Walsh next and the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor (unopposed) waded in and delivered an effective speech.

Congressman Curley wound up the evening, and let us state that Mr. Curley got an ovation equal to that of Governor Harmon's. The Ward 17 man was brief and the ceremonies were concluded.

Governor Harmon's speech was devoted to tariff reform. He talked plain talk to his fellow Ohioan, William Howard Taft. He accused him of sidetracking tariff revision by reciprocity with Canada.

"Two years ago the President told the people that if they didn't like the Payne-Aldrich-Smoot tariff bill which he had just signed and was pronouncing the best ever passed they ought to vote the Democratic ticket. Well, they did it. They put a Democratic House and went as far as they could toward putting a Democratic Senate in charge.

"Since something had to be done to appease the voters, he called a special session of Congress and brought up the old idea of reciprocity with Canada. What the people demanded was a general and substantial reduction of the tariff taxes. What the President proposed was to give them bread and not a stone, but only a crumb of bread.

Democrats have always believed in Reciprocity with all nations and they felt bound to support Reciprocity with Canada although it would not fulfil the obligations to relieve the people.

Farmers Got the Worst of It.

But the Democrats insisted upon fair treatment to all and found that the farmers got the worst of the agreement. They were the first to be put outside the pale of protection but they have to go on paying high prices for what they have to buy.

The Democrats' demand for the revision of the gross and notorious wool schedule and other reforms failed because of the opposition of the President and Senate.

What worthy bills got by House and Senate were vetoed by the President. His position is simply that those who by trickery of tariff making have secured a license to impose exorbitant prices upon the people shall go on doing it in spite of the action of both houses of Congress until five men who are not responsible to the people, not even experts, shall advise him how much these favors ought to be reduced and how to do so scientifically.

"It is a reflection upon our plan of government to say that the flagrant iniquities of the tariff laws shall go on defying good sense, common knowledge, and honest purpose until a commission without legal responsibility or authority shall decide how the chosen law-making body shall deal with them.

"I believe in the veto power. But it should be employed only on the clear and positive conviction of the executive that the public interest so requires.

"For the President to defeat the action of Congress, especially when it follows the plain mandate of the country, merely because he is not certain about it himself and wants to wait for somebody else to advise him is a new and perilous departure from the wise design of the Constitution.

The benefits proposed were great and general. The errors, if any, were at the worst conjectural, slight and of narrow operation. It is another instance of concern for the wrong persons.

Marks of Paternity

"These and other marks of paternity suggest the question whether the vetoes may not have been adopted offspring, like the defence of Ballinger.

"But not content with calling Congress unscientific, incompetent and ignorant, though in his vetoes he did so in parliamentary phrase, the President now in public speeches charges them with insincerity, employing the ruder language of the stump. He says they were playing politics.

"I have a fellow feeling for the Democratic leaders in Congress, for when I set about reforms in Ohio I was confronted by a Republican Assembly which discredited my administration in every way it could. But at the first opportunity the voters of the State most emphatically declared that they "play politics" who thwart efforts for reform and not they who make such efforts, as my commission was renewed and associates of my own party were given me by whom many benefits were secured for our citizens."

Foss Sees Victory.

Governor Foss said:

"I am glad to be here, although I did not come to make a speech. My time is coming later. You will hear enough of me before I get through. I wish to say a word of welcome to our distinguished guest, Governor Harmon, who has made a place for himself, not only in Ohio, but in the nation. He is standing in Ohio for the same principles for which we are fighting in Massachusetts, and he is accomplishing things.

"He told me to-day that when he was first elected Governor, the State treasurer was the only member of the ticket elected with him. The next time he had the whole Legislature.

"If I remember correctly, I was the only member of our State ticket elected last Fall, but this year we will elect the whole State ticket and both branches of the Legislature. We don't care who the Republicans nominate or what their platform is.

"Two years ago, they criticized us for making our fight on national issues; because we brought the tariff and reciprocity into the State campaign, yet we came very near winning that time. This year it is national issues that the Republicans want to talk about. They don't care to discuss what has been done on Beacon Hill, even with a hostile Legislature. We are willing to talk on both State and national issues and we have no doubt of the result."

Walsh Praises Foss.

David I. Walsh, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, spoke of the achievements of the Foss administration. He said:

"Though we come before the people in the favorable position of seeking a re-election for our candidate for Governor, we come before them as well in the more trying position of rendering an account of our work. They have a right to ask: 'What have you done?' We are ready for the inquiry; the record of our work on Beacon Hill is open to inspection and we are ready for the test.

"What a great record of achievement we present for the people's indorsement. The direct primary law; the limitation of the hours of labor, especially for women and children; the check upon the abuse of the injunction power so that the liberty or property of no man can be taken from him without trial by jury; the homestead act; the workmen's compensation act; the eight-hour bill; the minimum wage commission act, the nine million-dollar appropriation for the development of Boston harbor; the ringing plea of our Governor for radical reform of an unjust and inequitable system of taxation, the strong messages for the ratification of the Federal income tax and for a resolution from our Commonwealth in favor of election of United States Senators by popular vote.

"Indeed the election this Fall is more than ever to be a great and momentous referendum, and our party must be strengthened with a verdict of approval at the polls.

Another year is needed to realize the full benefits of Governor Foss's work on Beacon Hill, not only in carrying to enactment the defeated or halted legislation, but in accomplishing the great administrative reforms which our Governor has so persistently and vigorously advocated.

"We have reason, then, to enter into the contest before us with more courage and hope for a favorable verdict than ever before. Let our campaign slogan be, "Another year of the people's rule on Beacon Hill."

The wind blew and the rain fell yesterday and the old saying, "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good" was again proven correct.

The Democratic City Committee barbecue was called off for two weeks because of the inclement weather, but unfortunately the eatables could not be postponed like the date of the outing. These worthy charities received a portion of the 7,000 sandwiches and the steers which had been prepared for the outing: the Italian Society of St. Marco, Carney Hospital, Salvation Army, Home for Little Wanderers, St. Mary's Infant Asylum, Jewish Children's Home, Home for Destitute Catholic Children, and the Home for Aged Couples on Dudley street.

Harmon Tells of Taft's Tariff Position.

His (Taft's) position is simply that those who by the trickery of tariff making have secured a license to impose exorbitant prices on the American people shall go on doing it, in spite of the action of both houses of Congress, until five men who are not responsible to the people, nor even experts, shall advise him how much these favors ought to be reduced and how to do it scientifically.—Governor Harmon in his speech to Massachusetts Democrats.

GERTRUDE SWARTZ, WHO BECOMES MRS. BURROUGHS TO-DAY

Zeppelin Balloon Reaches Berlin After Long Flight.

BERLIN, Sept. 9.—The Zeppelin dirigible balloon Schwaben, which left Baden-Baden on Wednesday on a 360-mile trip to the German capital, arrived here at 11:45 o'clock from Gotham, 160 miles away. The Schwaben left Gotham at 6:15 a. m., making the distance in five and one-half hours.

'DOLPH' BURROUGHS IS WEDDED TO-DAY

Martin Lomasney's Legislative Colleague Takes Gertrude Swartz as His Bride.

"Dolph," as he is known all over the West End, is a representative from Ward 8, one of Martin Lomasney's lieutenants and a resident of Martin's bailiwick all his life.

His bride-elect is his next-door neighbor, a girl he has known ever since he was a boy. While they did not go to school together, they became acquainted in their school days. The wedding to-day is the happy climax to a boy and girl romance.

"Dolph" lives at No. 36 McLean street with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Max Burroughs. Miss Swartz is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harris Swartz at No. 34 on the same street.

The wedding will take place at the Union Park Street Synagogue at 8 o'clock this afternoon. The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. Dr. Eichler. Following the ceremony there will be a reception in the church vestry. Then "Dolph" and his bride will depart on a brief honeymoon. They will be back Saturday to take up their residence at No. 18 Hancock street, staying in "The Ward," as a matter of course. The honeymoon will be brief, because "Dolph" is a candidate for re-election to the House and must be on deck for the preparations for the State primaries.

"Jack" Swartz and Miss Sarah Swartz, brother and sister of the bride, will be best man and bridesmaid. The ushers will include George A. Flynn, assistant corporation counsel; ex-Councilman John Slater of Ward 12, Mitchell Basker, Dr. A. Green, ex-Representative "Dave" Mancovitz of Ward 8, Michael Porter of South Framingham, Samuel Bamber and A. Blumenthal.

There will be a large political contingent among the wedding and reception guests on "Dolph's" account. Martin Lomasney, the "Czar" himself, has told "Dolph" he would come, but it takes unusual pressure to make Martin actually put in an appearance at weddings and such festivities.

However, Senator "Joe" Lomasney will be there, also John R. Murphy, John C. Kiley, "Dan" Kiley, George Harlow, Representatives Haynes of Medford, Bastin of Pittsfield, Hennessy of North Adams and other friends of the bridegroom in Ward 8 and in the House, in addition to the friends and relatives of the bride.

GRAND TRUNK SCORES COUP OVER MELLEN

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Sept. 9.—Railroad rumors have it that President Hays of the Grand Trunk lines has scored one on President Mellen of the New Haven and Boston & Maine system which comes about from the refusal of Mr. Mellen to transfer the Grand Trunk sleeping cars over his lines from Portland to Old Orchard.

Mr. Hays is said to have secured controlling interest in the Portland Street Railway, which stock Mr. Mellen expected to bottle up, and is already sending passengers and baggage from Portland to the Summer resort free of charge. In connection with this deal it is also given out that Mr. Hays has secured the Atlantic Shore Street Railway, a line between Biddeford and this city. This, with the Portland railroad, would give the Grand Trunk a franchise to New Hampshire.

MRS. SHOEMAKER, WHO WAS KILLED AS AUTO SKIDDED

MRS. LILLIAN E. SHOEMAKER.

WOMAN KILLED AS BIG AUTO SKIDDED

Believed Mrs. Shoemaker Was Driving Machine When Fatal Accident Occurred.

THE theory was advanced in Attleboro last night that the accident to the automobile of Dr. Newell C. Bullard of that place on the Attleboro-Providence road Friday night, in which Mrs Lillian Shoemaker, wife of Dr. A. B. Shoemaker of Attleboro, was instantly killed, came when Mrs. Shoemaker was driving the car.

Mrs. Shoemaker was pinned under the car, which had turned turtle. Dr. Bullard was thrown out. It is hardly possible, in the opinion of friends of the victims, that Dr. Bullard would have been thrown clear of the machine if he had been driving while Mrs Shoemaker was left pinned under the car.

Dr. Bullard is still at the Emerson hospital, Forest Hills, where he was brought by Dr. F. S. Ward of Brattleboro after the tragedy. He is still in highly nervous state, though his condition is no longer considered dangerous.

NEVER ANY INDIGESTION, DYSPEPSIA OR SICK, GASSY, UPSET STOMACH.

Take your sour, out-of-order stomach—or maybe you call it Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Gastritis or Catarrh of Stomach; it doesn't matter—take your stomach trouble right with you to your Pharmacist and ask him to open a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and let you eat one 22-grain Triangule and see if within five minutes there is left any trace of your former misery.

The correct name for your trouble is Food Fermentation—food souring; the Digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fullness after eating, vomiting, nausea, heartburn, griping in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in mouth, constipation, pain in limbs, sleeplessness, belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness or many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is fickle, and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food lies like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind that at the bottom of all this there is but one cause—fermentation of undigested food.

Prove to yourself in five minutes that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong. Stop this fermentation and begin eating what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

ISABELLE COOLIDGE BRIDE AT MAGNOLIA

W. H. Coolidge's Daughter Becomes Wife of S. S. Stevens and Will Live in W. Va.

Most interesting among the Autumn weddings was that at Magnolia yesterday of Miss Isabelle Coolidge, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Coolidge, of "Gray Cliff," Newton Centre, to Samuel Sprague Stevens, son of Mr. and Mrs. Horace H. Stevens, of Beacon street, Brookline.

The ceremony took place at the Coolidge home at 2 o'clock, and was followed by a reception. The Rev. Edward T. Sullivan of Newton Centre performed the ceremony. The pretty bride, who wore the conventional white satin wedding gown, had no maid of honor, but had chosen four of her friends as bridesmaids. They were Miss Josephine Stevens, Miss Margaret Carlton, Miss Eleanor Bradley, of Brookline, and Miss Alice Tiffany, of New Bedford. They were gowned alike in white net, and wore large picture hats of pale blue.

Horace S. Stevens, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. The ushers were Edward Stevens of Brookline, William H. Coolidge, Jr., brother of the bride, Thompson Sampson of Boston, and F. W. Barker, Jr., of Syracuse.

Mr. and Mrs. Stevens, after an extended honeymoon will go to Holden, West Virginia, where they will make their home.

CIGARMAKERS GIVE AID.

Send Check for $400 to Workers in Syracuse.

Cigarmakers' Union 97 of this city forwarded a check for $400 to Syracuse, N. Y., to assist striking cigarmakers of that city, who have been out ten weeks in resistance to reduction of wages. There are 100 men out in the Syracuse strike. The vote to contribute the $400 at last night's meeting of the local union was unanimous. Secretary-Treasurer William Kindel sent the check to-day, losing no time in carrying out the union's vote.

MARTHA BARRON, THE BRIDE-TO-BE OF WENDELL ENDICOTT

THE engagement of Miss Martha Barron, youngest daughter of Clarence W. Barron, publisher of the Boston News Bureau, to H. Wendell Endicott of Dedham, son of Henry B. Endicott, shoe manufacturer, has been announced. Mr. Endicott is in charge of his father's Boston office. The elder Mr. Endicott is a cousin of former Vice-President Fairbanks.

Wendell Endicott, as he is known to his intimates, went to work at the bench in his father's shops at Lestershire, N. Y., shortly after his graduation from college. Although he is the only son and heir to his father's immense fortune, the young man remained in the shops until he had learned the business thoroughly, fitting himself for the position he now holds.

Miss Martha Barron is a favorite in the Back Bay and at the South Shore. She is a sister of Mrs. Hugh Bancroft. Miss Barron is a clever horsewoman and is a leader in all the social events in her set. The family, at present are occupying their Summer home at Cohasset. For the rest of the year they reside on Beacon street.

The date of the wedding has not yet been announced.

AUTO KILLS WOMAN IN WALTHAM STREET

Carrying Her Bundles to Take Trolley Car, Is Run Down, Dies in Hospital.

An unidentified woman was struck by an automobile on Moody street, Waltham, early last night and so severely injured that she died four hours later at the Waltham hospital without regaining consciousness. The automobile was owned and driven by Albert W. Chamberlain of Central street, Stoneham. It was said the woman, carrying several bundles, walked across the street to take a trolley car and was hit by the automobile.

Mr. Chamberlain picked the woman up and hurried her in his car to the hospital. Later he visited the Waltham police station and told his story. He was not detained by the police. With him in the machine were his two children.

The unknown woman was described as being about sixty years of age, and wore black hat, jacket, skirt, shoes and stockings and a white waist. It was thought she was on her way home from a shopping trip.

GLORY BLAZE AT REVERE.

Season Closes With Grand Parades of Floats and Autos.

The Mardi-Gras carnival which has been running every evening for the past week at Revere Beach, closed last night with a parade of floats representing the Carnival of Nations, and an auto parade. The combined parades practically closed the beach season.

E. A. Loud was the winner in the auto parade. He entered a car that was beautifully decorated and having two little ones representing cupids, on the front of the car. Mrs. Helene M. Swency was awarded the second prize and George H. Jackson was third. Three others received honorable mention. The prizes for the winners consisted of cash purses amounting to $75, $50, and $25, respectively. The parade of the floats and autos attracted thousands of people to Revere.

CATARRH OF BLADDER AND KIDNEYS A FREQUENT AND DREADED DISEASE

C. B. Newhof, 10 Delaware street, Albany, N. Y., President Montefiore Club, writes:

"Since my advanced age I find that I have been frequently troubled with urinary ailments.

"The bladder seemed irritated, and my physician said that it was catarrh caused by a protracted cold which would be difficult to overcome on account of my advanced years.

"I took Peruna, hardly daring to believe that I would be helped, but I found to my relief that I soon began to mend.

"The irritation gradually subsided and the urinary difficulties passed away.

"I have enjoyed excellent health now for the past seven months.

"I enjoy my meals, sleep soundly, and am as well as I was twenty years ago. I give all praise to Peruna."

Liver and Kidney Trouble.

Mr. George Forrester, 2747 Mascher street, Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "We have great faith in Peruna.

"My wife's condition was such that she thought she would die, as the doctors could not help her dyspepsia and catarrh of the stomach. Now she can eat anything. We keep Peruna in the house all the time, but it is only once in a while that she needs to use it.

"I was subject to liver and kidney trouble, which resulted in rheumatic pains, but I have not had a pain since I took Peruna, and very little liver trouble, as Peruna keeps the digestive organs in good working order, and that is the main thing."

PRES. C. B. NEWHOF.

Pe-ru-na Contains no Narcotics.

One reason why Peruna has found permanent use in so many homes is that it contains no narcotics of any kind. Peruna is perfectly harmless. It can be used any length of time without acquiring a drug habit. Peruna is permanent in its effect, and is a household friend in more than a million homes.

BE CONSERVATIVE, URGES JUDGE GARY

LONDON, Sept. 9.—Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the Steel Trust, will return to the United States on the Lusitania Monday. He talked to-day with an AMERICAN correspondent concerning business and labor conditions in America, sounded a warning note, saying that from now on the national policy must be conservative instead of one of "stickbuts" if we would keep the United States a foremost world power. He especially appealed to the press of America to take such a helpful stand during the coming political campaign. Judge Gary said:

"The United States has not taken that place among the nations of the world which it deserves, owing to the carelessness of youth, when too much money was made too quickly. We are now passing through a critical period. Many of our affairs are in a transition state, but things will come out all right.

"America has great opportunities. The requirement is for leading men of intelligence to rise to the occasion.

GIRL INDICTED FOR $1,050 GEM THEFT

Nineteen-year-old Vera Darling, alias Dowling, of Revere, who was arrested August 17 in connection with the disappearance of a diamond ring from a Back Bay jewelry store, has been indicted by the grand jury. The bill found against her charges her with the theft of a diamond ring valued at $1050. The girl pleaded not guilty to the charge.

It is alleged by the police that she posed as Dorothy Forbes, of the Vincent Club, and talked of her friendship with Miss Ellsworth Sears when she inspected a number of rings. She has spent twenty-one days in the Charles Street Jail.

Women Plead for Ballot.

The first of the Women's Suffrage Association's outdoor meetings held at Warrenton and Tremont streets South End, attracted a large crowd of women and curious men and the speeches were greeted with loud applause from feminine hands.

PROF. HERING CALLED IN EDDY WILL CASE

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 9.—A subpoena was issued to-day in the Eddy heatings, preparatory to a suit to set aside the will of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy by her two sons, for Professor Hermann S. Hering to give his deposition here on 11 o'clock next Monday, following the cross-examination of Former Senator Chandler.

Hering was formerly first reader of the Christian Science church here. He is a member of the lecture board of the Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, at Boston. It is expected that he will be asked to explain what is meant by "malicious animal magnetism," "diabolism," and other terms that have been used in connection with Christian Science. Forrest, chairman of the publicity committee, in New York, in which he asked what was being done to protect Mrs. Eddy from "Stetsonian argument" regretting that Calvin A. Frye was the medium through which this argument was being worked. The terms quoted are said to have been used in this letter, or something of that character.

Taft Smiles Again as Son "Bob" Leads Class

President Beams As He Tells Mrs. Taft of Good News from Harvard Law School.

It was nothing to do with golf or conquests over "Colonel Bogey." Nor did it relate to politics and the hopes for reciprocity.

It was a fine, fatherly, family smile and it was all on account of "Bob" Taft.

The President had just received a letter from Dean Thayer of Harvard Law School where "Bob" has studied for a year, to follow in his father's legal footsteps. The Dean's letter informed the President that "Bob" had completed his first year's work in the law school at the head of his class of 500.

It is rather a Taft habit to lead in school, for that matter. The President led his class at Yale and "Bob" did the same when he was there. At Harvard Law School "Bob" is merely keeping up family traditions.

WIFE SHOOTS RIVAL IN THEATRE SEAT

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 9.—Mrs. Earl Samuel this afternoon walked into the Dixie Theatre and going to the seat where Miss Willie West was seated, drew a thirty-eight-calibre revolver and fired three shots into the woman's neck. Samuel, the assailant's husband, was alongside of Miss West.

For a few moments the playhouse was in an uproar. Seven women fainted and a panic was narrowly averted. Miss West was removed to a hospital and Mrs. Samuel was arrested.

A. J. Simmons, a publisher, who was among the first to reach the wounded woman, declared that not a word was spoken. He said:

"Mrs. Samuel entered the theatre with her hand in a handbag, and when she got alongside Miss West she drew the revolver and opened fire. I never heard either one say a word."

Samuel and Miss West's names have been connected several times, and it is stated that it was due to her that divorce proceedings were instituted by Mrs. Samuel.

NONE BUT 'MACHINE' CANDIDATES ASKED

Much comment was made in Republican political circles on the fact that only the "machine" candidates for the State ticket on the Republican side have been invited to attend and speak at the smoke talk to be given by the Ward 14 Republican Club tomorrow night in Pilgrim Hall, South Boston. The announcement cards issued by the committee in charge of the arrangements for the smoke talk give the list of those who have been invited to speak as follows: Frothingham, candidate for the nomination for Governor; Luce, candidate for Lieutenant Governor; Langtry, the regular candidate for Secretary of State; James M. Swift, candidate for re-nomination for Attorney General; John E. White, candidate for State Auditor, and Elmer A. Stevens, candidate for the re-nomination for Treasurer.

'I HAVE GONE CRAZY,' SUICIDE'S WIRELESS

A message received in Boston last night by the Associated Wireless stated that a man who is believed to have committed suicide on the steamship Iroquois off Charleston, S. C., had left a note addressed to A. F. Clement of Plymouth. According to the wireless, the note read:

"Have gone crazy; can't find mother."
(Signed) J. H. WILLIAMS."

Mrs. Alice Smith Clement of Plymouth last night said she believed the supposed suicide was her father, William H. Jordan, formerly a Boston tailor. She said she had received the wireless message and also a telegram from the Charleston Navy Yard concern. It was observed that the name signed to the note gave the initials of Mrs. Clement's father reversed.

The Boston directory for 1910 contains the name of William H. Jordan, merchant tailor, room 21 in No. 9 Bromfield street. His residence is given as No. 9 Oakley street, Dorchester.

MRS. JACK GERAGHTY REBUFFED BY CHUMS

Eloping Bride Finds Newport Convention Is Stronger Than Friendship.

NEWPORT, Sept. 9.—Mrs. "Jack" Geraghty, formerly Miss Julia French, who married the man she loved, although he was only an automobile demonstrator, was snubbed by her old friend, Miss Roberta Willard, since she returned to Newport from Springfield, but that has not worried the young matron, apparently.

When Miss Willard caught sight of Mrs. Geraghty on the avenue it is said Miss Willard deliberately turned away, lifting her chin perceptibly. At which Mrs. Geraghty called sweetly:

"Oh, Roberto!"

Miss Willard turned, and then it was that Mrs. Geraghty's chin went in the air. And it was snub for snub!

Mrs. Geraghty was found to-day at her new home on Everett street, just off Kay street. It is a two-story wooden house with a small plot of ground about it. But one room has been really settled. That is on the second floor in front. That is where the young wife was found with a note book in which she had been writing.

"Writing a story of your life?" she was asked.

"No, far from it," replied Mrs. Geraghty. "I am copying some recipes. The last one is for boiled hominy."

"What about the story of you being snubbed by Miss Williams on Bellevue avenue?" she was asked.

"I wonder how that got out. I hope nobody saw me. Are you certain? What did they see?"

The reporter related the story of the meeting of the two erstwhile social chums.

"Well," she replied, "I guess they must have seen me."

"Have many people snubbed you, Mrs. Geraghty?"

"Well, not many," with a smile.

"How many?"

"Well, I'll tell you—the only people who have what you might call snubbed me have been those who are trying very hard to get in the swim. Roberta Willard is one of them. She used to pretend to be a friend of mine. That was when she thought I could be of some use to her, and the same may be said of the rest who thought they could get invitations through me to dances and things of that kind.

"My marriage has shown me one thing—it has shown who are my real friends and who are not.

"But I'm not worried. I have still many good friends—friends like the Sherman girl (Mildred), and they are the ones that I care about."

Referring to her recipes the reporter remarked that he had understood that she learned cooking before she was married.

"No," replied the young wife, "but I wish I had. But I'm making up for it as fast as I can. But I'm not going to talk any more. Why, I have a trunk full of newspaper clippings and I am receiving letters every day from all over the country from strangers."

MANY CANDIDATES IN CAMBRIDGE CONTEST

Campaign for Honors on Beacon Hill to Go to Primaries in Two Weeks.

With the primaries a little over two weeks away and with thirty-one Representatives and three Senatorial candidates, the political situation in Cambridge has reached an interesting stage, for candidates are numerous.

In the First Middlesex Representative district, comprising wards 1, 2 and 3, East Cambridge, Representatives Joseph Reed and Thomas Ryan will seek a third term. They will have their work cut out for them as there are six other candidates in the race. President Frederick Burke of the Common Council, Alderman James F. Black, William J. Donovan, Michael Mahoney, James W. Caunes and John E. Quinn are the other candidates. This is the only Democratic representative district in the city. The Republicans have no candidates in this territory.

In the Second Middlesex Representative District, comprising Wards 4, 5, 6 and 7, Cambridgeport, Representative James W. Bean will seek a fourth term. Representative Charles J. Wood will seek a second term. Representative Harry A. Penniman will drop out, after having had three terms. The other Republican candidates are former Representative Julius Meyers, former President Henry J. Winslow, former Councilman Charles H. Milner, former Representative Eben H. Googins, John B. Smithers and Clement G. Morgan. This is a strong Republican territory.

The Democratic candidates are Alderman Robert O'Neil, Mark Delaney, John T. Lynch and Thomas Davis.

In the Second Middlesex Senatorial District Senator Harry N. Stearns, a Republican, will seek a second term and will be unopposed in his own party. The Democratic candidates are Maurice M. Lynch and James Culhane. Rumor has it that George J. Raymond, who opposed Stearns last year, will make another try this year. No papers were filed for Mr. Raymond but it is said that he will be a candidate on election day.

The Democrats are going to make a strong effort to break into the Third Middlesex Representative District, comprising Wards 8, 9, 10 and 11, North Cambridge. At present, and during the last few years, the three places in this district have been captured by the Republicans. This year Otis P. Russell, a nephew of the late Governor William E. Russell, John L. G. Glynn, former Alderman John P. Brennan, Alderman Michael O'Connor, W. J. Donovan and James M. Cleary are the Democratic candidates.

On the Republican side of the fence Representative Russell A. Wood, who has had three terms, will not be a candidate. Wood is very busy trying to beat out "Pat" Langtry for the office of the Secretary of State. Representatives George L. Dow and Russell D. Crane will seek third terms. Mayne J. Little, C. Burnside Seagrave and former Alderman Marshall F. Blanchard are other Republican candidates.

ELIZABETH COLT IS TO WED THIS WINTER

Judge's Daughter to Be Bride of Andrew Weeks Anthony of This City.

THE wedding of Miss Elizabeth Colt of Bristol, R. I., to Andrew W. Anthony of Boston and Beverly Farms, whose engagement was announced a few days ago, will take place this Winter, probably in January. This wedding will interest society circles of Bristol, Providence, Boston and the North Shore.

Miss Colt, who is known among her society friends as "Primrose," though her baptismal name is Elizabeth, is the third daughter of Judge Le Baron B. Colt of the United States Circuit Court. She made her debut a few winters ago at a ball given by her parents in her honor in Providence.

The engagement was announced at a luncheon given at the Colt home in Bristol. Subsequent to the announcement Miss Colt was a guest for a few days at "Rose Ledge," the summer home at Beverly Farms of Mr. and Mrs. S. Reed Anthony, parents of her fiance.

Miss Colt has since returned to Bristol. Her younger sister, Miss Beatrice Colt, who entered society two seasons ago, is a guest at "Rose Ledge" over the week end.

Andrew W. Anthony is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony. The father is a member of the Boston banking house of Tucker, Anthony & Co. Mrs. Anthony was Miss Harriet P. Weeks. Andrew Weeks Anthony, whose middle name is his mother's family name, is connected with the New Haven Railroad. He has one sister, Miss Ruth Anthony.

Coney, who shot Robert Bruce Watson, wealthy club man, architect and politician, was arraigned before Municipal Judge Gemmill. The hearing of her case was continued until September 22. Her bail was fixed at $2,000 and she was released. Watson's wounds are not serious and it is said he will be able to leave the hospital within two weeks.

BOSTON SCHOOLS TO GET 102,000 PUPILS

Opening Wednesday Will Find Several New Buildings and Others Enlarged.

One hundred and two thousand boys and girls will begin school in Boston next Wednesday morning. The elementary schools will take care of 80,000 of this number. The fifteen normal, Latin and high schools in the city proper and districts will house the remaining 14,000.

The greatest advances in registration are in the city high schools. The English high school has had to increase its accommodations by annexes. The Girls' High, on West Newton street, has been enlarged during the year by an eight-room wing which accommodates 400 pupils.

New buildings, which will be occupied for the first time next Wednesday, include Abraham Lincoln School, Fayette, Ferdinand and Melrose streets, Abraham Lincoln district; forty rooms, 1,700 pupils.

John L. Motley School, Savin Hill avenue, Edward Prescott district; four rooms, 160 pupils.

For future needs the Schoolhouse Commission is erecting the following structures, so far unnamed: Lyman district, East Boston, Terrance street; sixteen rooms. Lewis district, Roxbury, Walnut avenue; twelve rooms. Phillips Brooks district, Dorchester, Dacia street; ten rooms.

FREED IN AUTO CASE.

Grand Jury Returns No Bill Against S. M. Padden.

The grand Judy returned "no bills" against Samuel M. Padden, thirty-seven, of No. 133 Bellingham avenue, Revere, and Michael E. McCarthy, thirty-one, of No. 408 Hammond street, Brookline. The men were arrested and charged with manslaughter on August 14 for causing the death of Patrick J. Dowling of No. 1,055 Washington street by running him down with an automobile near the State House. The car was owned by Padden, who was instructing McCarthy how to run it. The grand jury presented thirty-seven true bills and twelve no bills to Judge Newton.

CAMBRIDGE SCHOOLS TO OPEN WEDNESDAY

Several New Teachers to Report for Duty in High School Lower Grades.

With the opening of the schools of Cambridge Wednesday, several new teachers will report for duty as the result of the resignation of some teachers and extended vacations to others.

Cecil T. Derry of the High and Latin school has resigned to teach in the Fall River High school. In his place will be Frank B. Gallivan of Newton. He is a brother of Dr. Gallivan, a former chairman of the Boston school committee and of Street Commissioner James A. Gallivan of Boston.

Miss Fardy of the High and Latin school resigned last Spring to be married. Miss Kilpatrick and Miss Burton will be away for the year. Miss Edna C. Cullin and Miss Ethel G. McElroy will substitute for Miss Kilpatrick and Miss Burton.

At the Rindge Technical school, Miss Ellis will probably not return to school until later in the year on account of illness. Mr. Cobb will be succeeded by George H. Gohlke, of Sudbury, who will teach industrial history. Charles C. Jones, Jr., of Harvard, will start the new course in printing.

A successor to the late Miss Whoriskey, principal of the Lasell school, has not yet been selected. Miss Robinson, the former teacher at the Reed school, which has been discontinued, retires. Miss Burke joins the staff of teachers at the Agassiz school and Miss Ruggli goes to the Sleeper school. Mr. Schoenfeld, the manual training teacher in the Webster district, will be succeeded by John E. Howard. John J. Desmond succeeds Mr. Salmon as sub-master at the Roberts school.

C. H. AMES EXPIRES.

Well Known Publisher Dies as He Sits at Luncheon.

Charles Henry Ames, director and secretary of D. C. Heath & Co., publishers of educational books and of the Prang Educational Company, dropped dead yesterday afternoon in the dining room of the City Club. Mr. Ames was about to take a seat at a table for luncheon. Friends rushed up to render help, but discovered he was dead. Mr. Ames was born in 1847 and graduated from Amherst. He was a brother of Mrs. Lucia Ames Mead and was a member of a number of organiza-

PLANS ARE RUSHED FOR COLUMBUS DAY

Chief Marshal Dunn Awaits Reports of the Number of Men in Parade Line.

Lieutenant-Colonel John H. Dunn, who is to be chief marshal of the Columbus Day parade, Oct. 12, has appointed as his chief of staff Lieutenant George H. Nee, battalion adjutant of the Ninth regiment.

Plans for Columbus Day are now being pushed ahead with energy.

Circulars have been sent from the chief marshal's office at 18 Boylston street to the executives of the Knights of Columbus, the Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, the Holy Name Society, and the different Total Abstinence bodies, asking them to report the number of men they will have in the parade. As soon as Chief Marshal Dunn has this information in his possession he will begin to make up his plan of parade formation.

An interesting feature will be the presence this year, for the first time, of the temperance regiment of the archdiocese, which was recently organized.

All indications point to a demonstration which, both in size and variety of features and enthusiasm, will excel the great procession of last year.

As it is known that many organizations from outside Boston intend to participate in the celebration, the chief marshal is anxious to have all communications concerning those bodies sent to him without delay.

The full list of committees will be made up this week. The first consignment of 25,000 of the Columbus Day medals has arrived and are now ready for distribution. All information about medals may be had at the Boylston street headquarters.

FIREMEN HAMPERED ON OLIVER STREET

Iron shutters on the windows and no lights on the street, in addition to the close quarters in that district, gave the firemen a hard battle at a fire in the brass foundry on the top of the four-story building at No. 130 Oliver street, last night, that resulted in a damage of $2,000 to the fittings of the establishment. F. N. McIntyre is the proprietor.

The only way that the firemen could reach the flames was by using the aerial ladders. Windows in the rear were backed by iron shutters, making it impossible for the firemen to get in. They were given quite a scare, as the district is congested and all the business houses in the vicinity contained inflammable material. The fire was confined to the floor on which it started. It was feared for a time that the flames would break through to the dyehouse and chemical stores next door.

Centennial of Perry's Victory.

PUT-IN BAY, O., Sept. 9.—The centennial celebration of Commodore Perry's victory over the British on Lake Erie in the war of 1812 opened to-day and will last until Tuesday. In connection with this celebration the National Perry Commission is holding a three-day meeting.

APPEALS TO SOCIETY TO HELP RED CROSS

Miss Mabel Boardman, the distinguished secretary of the National Red Cross Society, appealed to society folks at Magnolia yesterday to help establish a $2,000,000 endowment fund for the society. She made her appeal at a tea given by Mrs. J. C. Kerr of Brooklyn, who was assisted by some young women of the North Shore set, including Miss Grace Kerr of Brooklyn, Miss Florence Willis and Miss Fifelle Willis of Detroit and Miss Isabel DePeresa.

Miss Boardman said that Germany had established a $7,000,00 Red Cross endowment fund; France, $5,000,000; Japan, $7,500,000, and Russia was creating a large one.

"If these nations can do this," she said, "why shouldn't we, the richest nation in the world, raise $2,000,000 to enable the society to have ready funds all the time. In small disasters, then, there would be no need of appealing to the public for help."

Miss Boardman described the work of the society. She said that miners were particularly interested in it because when anything serious happens to them the Red Cross is always first on hand. The work goes along after the disaster, too, as illustrated in the San Francisco earthquake and fires and in Mexico. It stands for a spirit that holds men together.

In time of war the Red Cross is common to all nations. Miss Boardman told how, for instance, the Japanese Red Cross had sent funds to the Russian Red Cross in the Russo-Japanese war to care for the Japanese wounded and prisoners.

HOTEL GUESTS FLEE DOWN FIRE ESCAPES

Endangered by Flames at the Upton, Four Climb From the Windows.

One young woman and three men fled down fire escapes and other guests were driven down to the lobby and the street by a $1500 fire in the Hotel Upton, corner of Dartmouth and Harwich streets, South End, last night.

Miss Clara Lowden, on the third floor, two rooms from where the fire started, was driven back from the stairway by smoke. She went down the fire escape on the Harwich street side.

In a room adjoining the linen room were William Beaty, E. S. Hunter and J. A. Jordan, traveling salesmen. They grabbed their clothing, climbed out on the fire escape on the Dartmouth street side, dressed there hastily and scrambled to the ground.

The fire, caused probably by rats and matches, burned out three rooms on the third floor and one on the fourth. The hotel is owned by William Hardy.

ACCIDENT HALTS SHIP.

NEWPORT, Sept 9.—Her machinery becoming disabled through an accident to the valve gear, while bound for Halifax, N. S., with a class of naval apprentices, the training ship Adams of the Philadelphia Marine Training School was forced to turn back under sail and put in here for repairs. The accident occured in Vineyard Sound.

ESCAPES BY SAWING DEER ISLAND BARS

Then Prisoner Swam Across the Perilous Shirley Gut, and Disappears.

Sawing the bar of his cell in the old prison at Deer Island, Frank Stone, alias Frank T. Doyle, who was serving a thirty-six months' sentence, escaped early yesterday morning.

The departure of Stone is surrounded in mystery and Penal Commissioner Gore has instituted a rigid inquiry. Stone was in a cell on the sixth floor of the prison, and how he managed to escape to the ground and then make his departure are things that remain to be explained.

The prisoner was missed about 5 o'clock yesterday morning. One of the guards discovered two of the bars of his cell filed through and the occupant missing. The guard immediately sounded an alarm and sentries were placed all about the island. A thorough search failed to reveal any trace of the missing inmate.

It is assumed that Stone came down from the sixth floor upon a rope made from window cords and then swam across Shirley Gut.

The missing prisoner was sentenced on February 15, 1911 to thirty-six months for breaking and entering. He is twenty-seven years of age and gave his address when arrested as 469 Massachusetts avenue. He is also well known in Holyoke and Chicopee. The description furnished the police is 5 foot 7 inches, weighing 136 pounds, blue eyes, brown hair, light complexion and smooth faced.

The Architects' Final Plans for the New Building Are Ready

A matter of only a few weeks now when the work of tearing down the buildings on the present site begins. The work now is real and earnest.

We enter to-morrow upon the second week of the last year in these premises. While we shall be "tearing down" across the street—here we shall be "building up"—building up the sales—so that when the New Building is ready next fall—it's to be three times the size of our present quarters—we shall take over there a business big enough to fill it.

Our plans for doing this are simple but big—to give the best selection of merchandise to be found in Boston in the lines in which we are known as the leading Specialists—to give the best values—to give the best service.

The party landed at the [illegible] of Wellington avenue. The [illegible] the party were [illegible]. Two automobiles were in waiting. The party was whirled in them to Beechwood. There was nothing [illegible] the exterior of that magnificent villa to indicate that the [illegible] was about to take [illegible].

The wedding services did not take long, and the girl bride was the coolest person in the party. She stepped into a new social position as if to the manner born, and as though she regarded millions of money, yachts, villas, automobiles, whole stables of horses, an enormous wedding dower, a town house and exalted society [illegible] of no great consequence. Colonel Astor's face beamed with happiness after the ceremony and he is reported to have said:

Georges CLEAN-UP At 14-16 Summer Street

WE only remain at this location from week to week by the courtesy of the owners and builders—and our stay is subject at any time to a four or five day notice to vacate. Meanwhile extensive alterations are going on at our new building.

384 Washington St.

If we could remain here till Oct. 1st, and all work went smoothly, everything would be fine, but we face the probability of a notice to vacate any day; and of the unusual building delays on our new store — hat's why we have ripped all prices on every light and medium weight Suit and Overcoat in the store, many heavy enough for late Fall wear—down to these three ridiculous prices.

$6, $9 and $12

Values Range $15.00 to $10.00

This is likewise a splendid saving time in Winter and Fur-lined Overcoats—they're all selling here now at 33 1-3 cents on the dollar. Also Walking, Prince Albert, Dress and Tuxedo Suits, in style a full year in advance of ready-mades.

Special Raincoat Notice

This is not a specialty Raincoat store, but we have the largest stock in Boston to both domestic and imported English Mackintoshes.

The Big League

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

YOU want to play in the Big League, boy?
  I guess that you will, some day,
And the lightning brain (the managers' creed),
  And the heart that will bid you stay.

But when you go to the Big League, boy,
  And play on the Big League grounds,
As the seasons roll you will pay the toll
  Till your pulse less buoyantly bounds.

And you'll learn strange things in the Big League, boy,
  The cream of the good and bad
You will come to know in that shifting show,
The things that I learned in the long ago,
  When I, too, was a careless lad.

For I came to play in the Big League, boy,
  And I played my string to the end,
To eyes divine where the white lights shine
I mumbled toasts over bubbling wine—
  And finished minus a friend.

You want to play in the Big League, boy?
  I guess that you will, some day,
And this is the prayer of an old-time player—
None was stronger and none was gayer—
  God help you along your way.

Country's Best Golfers to Compete for Title on Rye Course This Week.

The National Golf Championship tournament starts Monday on the links of the Apawamis Golf Club, at Rye, New York, and the meeting for the 1911 title promises to be the greatest in the history of the game in this country.

Not only will there be a field of nearly [illegible] starters, but the calibre of the entrants is many degrees higher than any previous record. Furthermore, the first touch of internationalism in the premier [illegible] is to be felt, for Harold Hilton, the British amateur champion and ex-open champion of England, has sent in his entry and will be with the field to-morrow morning.

Can Sam Langford by any possible manner wrest the world's heavyweight championship title from Jack Johnson? This is the perplexing question that is worrying the fighting fraternities on both continents. The plain fact that these black men so far overshadow their rivals at present that they are the only gladiators fit to battle for the title [illegible] the issue.

Sifting it down finer, can a good little man beat a good big man? History answers emphatically NO. Nevertheless, in this particular case many close and smart students of the sport feel that precedent will be reversed.

All acknowledge that Jack Johnson is a great fighter, though skeptics claim that in beating Jeffries he licked [illegible] great man. Everyone who has seen Langford at full speed admits [illegible] that he is a wonderful fighter. Whether he can upset tradition and cold calculation [illegible] burning sport question.

Scanning the measurements of both men figures favor Johnson greatly. His height gives him an advantage of [illegible] inches. When facing a smaller man Johnson has only to throw his body back and the smaller man suffers great disadvantage. [illegible] a smaller rival, he towers over the [illegible] and makes useful advantage of [illegible] length. In agility he is no man's understudy and for cleverness he stands supreme.

Langford Confident Enough.

If he and Langford meet in the middle of a ring in Gotham there will be a startling surprise for the spectators. The [illegible] impression will be "How long can the [illegible] man stay?" Cold facts make it appear [illegible] for Langford to battle Johnson, but if Jack Johnson will face him, Langford will travel across the world to get the opportunity. That's how much of a chance the little man thinks he has.

A comparison of the measurements shows one part of the body—a principal factor—in which Langford holds the palm [illegible] is the chest. Under normal [illegible] he measures forty-four inches [illegible] upper trunk, while Johnson [illegible] thirty-nine, an advantage of [illegible] for Langford. Ring history shows that the majority of great fighters possessed abnormal chests. During a [illegible] strenuous encounter the organs [illegible] perform the real functions of the battle. The vast lung power stands [illegible] That word [illegible] everything.

Around the waist Johnson [illegible] thirty inches, while Langford [illegible] tape to thirty-three inches. [illegible] prove that except for the [illegible] torso Langford has a sturdier body than his rival.

In the length of the reach both men [illegible] stretch seventy-two inches, and the other portions of the arm [illegible] vary so slightly that there is really [illegible] difference.

Coming down to the weight, Johnson when down to fighting trim tips the beam around 200 pounds. Langford now does his best work around 18[illegible] pounds. So in this respect there is [illegible] ference, when one figures [illegible] weight division [illegible]

Sam's Record Looks Better.

Breaking away from [illegible] which favors the [illegible] naturally turns to the records of [illegible]

[illegible]

But take Langford's complete record and compare it with Johnson's [illegible]

[illegible]

Here's a perplexing poser. Does Johnson like the gaff? Nobody knows. There never has been a fight in which [illegible] had to take real punishment. When [illegible] The middleweight champion [illegible]

[illegible]

Jack Would Use Familiar Methods.

Should the pair clash, Johnson's method of fighting would be the same as of old [illegible]

Sam Langford Has One Advantage, Which May Help Him to Victory

A comparison of the physical measurements of the two great [illegible] gladiators of the present day—Jack Johnson the champion, and Sam Langford [illegible] reveals some interesting facts. [illegible] to the dimensions of both men [illegible] their contention. Johnson has the [illegible] but the [illegible] and the [illegible] that Langford can beat Johnson [illegible] the fact that Langford is possessed with a more expansive chest. Johnson's chest measures [illegible] inches when normal and 42½ when expanded. Langford, though [illegible] compared to Johnson, has a chest measurement of 4[illegible] inches normal and 46 inches expanded. Langford's great lung power enables him to withstand the wear and tear of a long battle. Johnson's waist measures 30 inches, while Langford's is 33 inches.

Johnson's cleverness, jabbing and chopping keep the [illegible]

1½-TON DECATUR TRUCK

COST OF MAINTENANCE per ton-mile for a truck of given capacity depends on numerous factors. But no factor has more weight than

CAREFUL GROOMING daily inspection to catch and correct small troubles before they have a chance to grow big. The truck that every morning starts out in perfect condition runs little risk of break-down. And the total cost for "repairs" is kept at a minimum, because every ailment is checked in season. Our patrons save this eternal vigilance by storing their trucks at

THE DECATUR SERVICE DEPOT, where our skilled mechanics inspect each truck daily, so that when the driver takes it out in the morning he can be absolutely certain that his truck is in shape to work at highest efficiency. Think of the saving which this regular attention effects in the course of a year, the economy not only in repairs but in gasoline, oil, and every other item of maintenance.

LOCATED MOST CONVENIENTLY at Green St., off Lansdowne St., just across the Harvard Bridge in Cambridge—the logical trucking center for Greater Boston and adjacent regions.

THE TRUCKHORSE IS NOW THE LUXURY and the Decatur Motor Truck is the practical, proven, economical necessity. We specify the Decatur because we have had every opportunity to observe its work under the most varying and difficult conditions. We stand prepared to demonstrate just how and just how much the Decatur truck will improve your service and cut your cost.

Will you give us the opportunity?

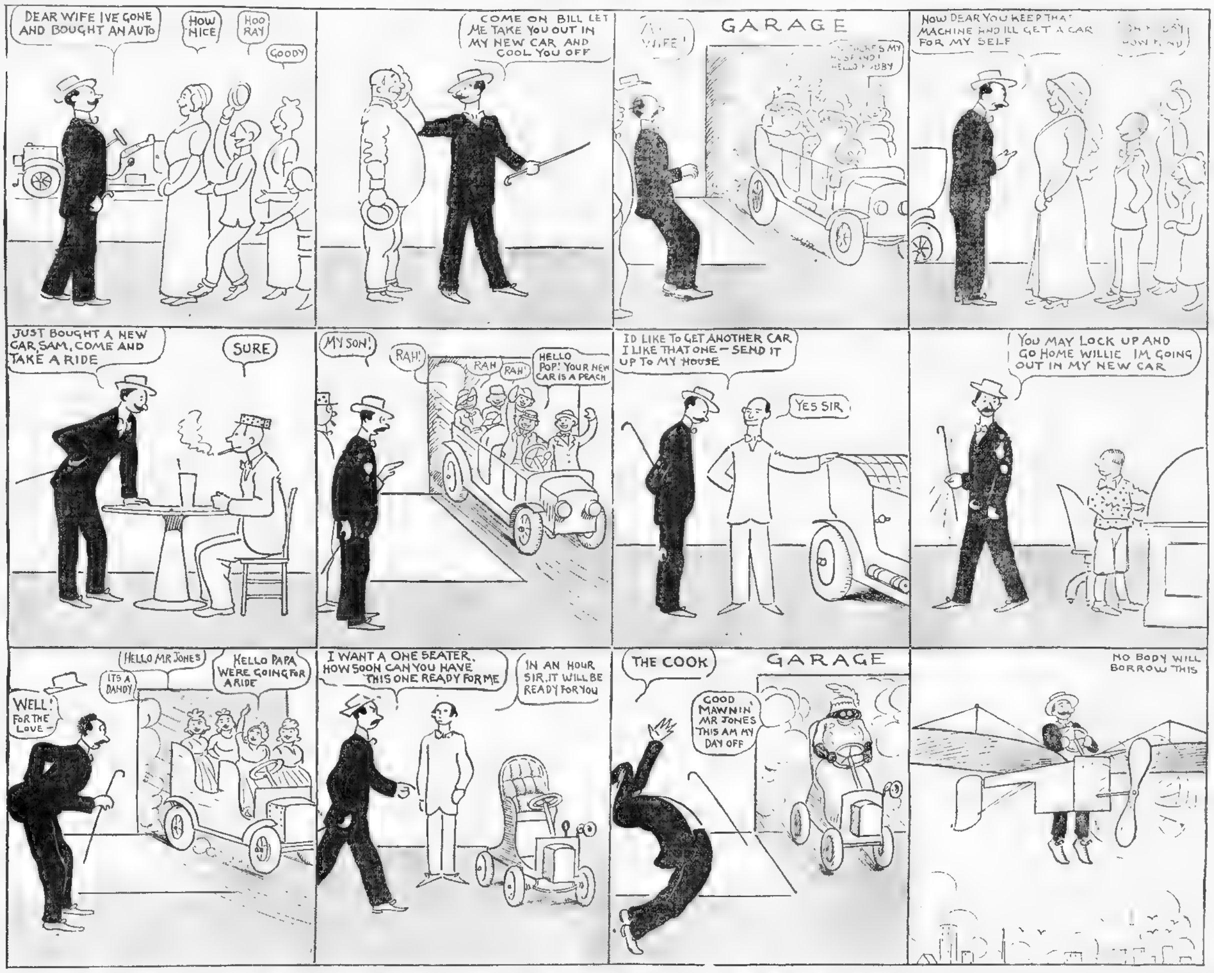
By T. E. POWERS, the Famous Cartoonist



FUN ON AN OCEAN LINER---

By Marshall P. Wilder, the Famous Entertainer Who Has Crossed a Hundred Times.

THERE has always been a discussion among the wise ones as to there being gold in the ocean. In fact, there have been companies formed to get it out of the ocean, and there are companies that get gold out of the passenger. There is one good thing about ocean travel, there is no dust.

After you get through tipping every one from the [illegible] to the bowsprit you are entirely free from d[illegible]

As I was getting off the boat a steward came at me with a whisk broom. I said:

"There is no more dust on me."

"Well, try your luck," I said.

He got my car fare.

They told me to drink two glasses of salt water every morning before breakfast, that it would make me grow. Look at me. I have been going over for twenty years. Further, that it would increase my two feet. Look at them. They used to be human. That must be what has kept me down, for I feel like a short acquaintance.

Two things you can be certain of on board ship—seasickness and gossip, and on a round trip you are often a story in black and white. On the day over you meet the fellow who says:

"Hello, Wilder, are you going over? Say, we will have a fine time. Nothing to do but eat, drink and sleep." And you don't meet him again until Liverpool, a week later.

[illegible]

I said, "No, do I look like a mutton chop?"

[illegible]

You know in rough weather they build a fence [illegible]

M. HENRI BERNSTEIN, the French playwright, who fought a duel with a dramatic critic a few weeks ago, failed to shoot the critic, but wounded one of the doctors

We believe that he is the first playwright on record who ever "missed" a dramatic critic.

M. Bernstein after his wonderful exhibition of marksmanship was immediately challenged by two other daredevil dramatic critics to meet in mortal combat

Bernstein has accepted their challenges and the critics had best beware, because Bernstein is a pretty wise fellow, and the next time, the chances are, he will aim at the doctor

AT one time Jeff startled [illegible] household with the announcement that he was about to enter upon the state of matrimony Though father hated to see the faithful old fellow leave as he might do if he were spliced, he was glad to see Jeff made happy by getting the dark girl of his choice. So when Jeff came to him and asked him the proper steps to be taken when a man had decided to team up, he did all he could for him

"What am a man spose to do when he am on de point ub takin' a wife, Marse Cox?" [illegible]

FITZ [illegible] feel? I feel fine. [illegible] like a sore finger, [illegible] By heck, here's Gawge! Hello [illegible] how do you feel?

GEORGE—I feel O. K.

FITZ—Well, Gawge, I just thought of a joke. Did you? Yes [illegible] a joke set to poetry, Gawge—

That's cute, eh, G[illegible] Gawge, let's you and I practice [illegible] I'll be the [illegible] the [illegible] Gawge?

FITZ—[illegible] "Gawge, wh[illegible] that can't wag its tail like next Saturday? [illegible] WHY [illegible] can't wag its tail [illegible] next Saturday? [illegible] then I tell the answer to the joke, Gawge. Now, are you ready, Gawge? Get ready now. Here I come, [illegible]

GEORGE—Come ahead, let her go.

GEORGE—I don't know, Fitz. WHY is a dog that can't wag its tail like next Saturday?

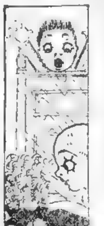
GEORGE—Go [illegible] away.

FITZ—[illegible] and I say "OO, I feel bad today." Then you say "OO, WHY do you feel bad today?" [illegible] "Because I lost my wife." Then you say "Gee, it must be hard to lose a wife." Right [illegible] the rest of it. Are you ready, Gawge?



GEORGE—On with the dance.

FITZ—OO, I feel bad to-day.

GEORGE—You do? What seems [illegible]

FITZ—No, No, NO! Don't say [illegible], Gawge. You'll crab the [illegible] thing. You must say: "OO, WHY do you feel bad to-day?" and don't forget the "OO" in front of [illegible] all set, Gawge?

GEORGE—Go, Fitz.

FITZ—OO, I feel bad to-day.

GEORGE—OO, [illegible] do you feel [illegible]

FITZ—[illegible] That's the answer, [illegible] tell another.

GEORGE—[illegible]

FITZ—I say to you when I come on: "Gawge, I can't eat [illegible]." Right away you speak up and say "Why?" That's all you have to say, Gawge. It's a small [illegible], Gawge. Are you ready?

GEORGE—[illegible]

FITZ—Gawge, I can't eat watermelons.

GEORGE—Why?

FITZ—Because they [illegible] off [illegible] knife! Here's another one, Gawge. I say "Gawge, how many hairs on a pig's face?" Then you say "I don't know." Now keep cool, Gawge. Here I come. Gawge, how many hairs are there on a pig's face?

GEORGE—I don't know, Fitz.

FITZ—Well, the next time you shave count 'em. Ha! Ha! Ha! Don't get mad, Gawge. Don't get mad-dad! Now tune up a bit, Gawge. I'm going to fire away with some parodies. Strike up "Call Me Up Some Rainy Afternoon," will you?

> One day last week I had a toothache,
> So to a dentist I did go.
> When he said a look he'd take
> I shut my mouth so tight and murmured "NO."
> So he told his helper Jake,
> "Take this hatpin and stand over there,
> When I tell you to 'let 'er go'
> Jab it through the bottom of the chair." Zowie!

CHORUS:

> It was a very painful afternoon;
> I saw stars, saw the comet and the moon.
> I opened my mouth to yell;
> He grabbed the tooth and it felt like—

> If you don't there's going to be a wake."
> It was over in a wink,
> But I really didn't think
> That the roots could go down so far.

Now, Gawge, play "Any Little Girl That's a Nice Little Girl."

> I met a girl I thought a dream,
> I married her on sight,
> I got cured soon, on our honeymoon,
> In balmy June, on our wedding night
> She took off a false limb and an arm,
> And laid them on a chair;
> I sang to her as she laid down
> Her false teeth, eye and hair.

CHORUS

> That you're not the girl for me.
> I can see without a book,
> Now that I've had a look,
> That you've been false to me.
> So I'll go sleep on the chair instead
> 'Cause there's more of you there than there is in the bed.
> So listen, little girl, I can see, little girl,

GEORGE—Goodness, gracious! And, pray, what for?

VALERIE buried her face in her hands for a moment, then quietly turned, lowering her hands from her face, and looked down at the delicate, intimate garments spread in order on the counterpane beside her. She stood for a moment reflecting, then she knelt down beside the bed and covered her eyes again while she said whatever prayer she had in mind.

It was not a very short petition, because it concerned Neville. She asked nothing for herself except as it regarded him or might matter to his peace of mind. Otherwise what she said, asked and offered related wholly to him.—From "The Common Law," in the October Number of the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Copyrighted by the International Magazine Company.

WHY I LEFT MY {HUSBAND / WIFE

By WEX JONES

WE have just heard that MARRIAGE IS ON TRIAL. Several married people have told us so, and they ought to know—because they're married, and might be presumed to take a deep interest in such trials. Just as a fly cop will follow up trials for robbery, arson, marr—er, murder and other crimes. From evidence furnished by these married folks we should judge that MARRIAGE IS A TRIAL—not a trial marriage, for a trial marriage can't be a trial. Only a marriage that isn't a trial marriage can be a tri—well, anyway, wives are leaving husbands and husbands are leaving wives, and Wex Jones, who isn't married (having a keen sense of humor and seeing the joke) has undertaken, impartially, to find out why they do it. This is the first article in the series. He intended to preface this article with one entitled, "Why I Married My Husband," and "Why I Married My Wife," but as neither of them could tell why, he had to drop the idea.

One of the articles in this sensational series will be on "How to Be Happy Though Married." The material for this was furnished Mr. Jones by a blind man whose wife is dumb.

WHY I LEFT MY HUSBAND

I SHALL never forget the first time I saw James.

I am taller than most women, with a regal carriage and glorious black hair. James is a little, insignificant looking person, colorless in every way, yet the first time I saw him I was strangely attracted to him.

I remember I was playing the pianola, and his rapt look fascinated me.

"What expression! What feeling!" he murmured as I finished my rendition of "All Alone."

Then I did not know that this was the usual bunk handed out by men to unsuspecting girls. Indeed, I thought that I had discovered a kindred soul, for I flattered myself that I played an automatic piano with more technique than most girls of my age.

So it was that James and I began an acquaintance that was to end in matrimony.

One of my chief objections to acquaintances is that one can never be sure that they will not end as mine did, in marriage.

Any way, James and I were married, and, at first, I was happy, I suppose. At least I did not have time enough to ponder upon being unhappy, as I did in later years.

James was quite a devoted husband at first. He used to kiss me good-bye whenever he went to business, and generally acted as if he were an essential monogamist, as Mrs. Upton Sinclair expresses it.

My first awakening came one evening when James came home after what he described as a hard day's work in the office. I had myself done some exhausting intellectual work that afternoon on my monograph on "The Psychology of Eve," and had not bothered with such a mundane thing as dinner.

The first thing my husband said when he came into the house was:

"Well, dear, I hope you"—

Perhaps you think he was hoping that I had succeeded with my intellectual work. But no. He finished the sentence: "Well, dear, I hope you have cooked a big dinner. I'm as hungry as a bear after working so hard all day."

Not a word about my soul needs, you see.

But even then I kept my temper and said, as sweetly as I could: "Listen to this chapter from 'The Psychology of Eve,' my dear, and see if it is not food for the spirit."

When James coarsely replied that the food he wanted was pork chops my heart fell. I knew then that, essentially monogamous as he was, he was also forever of the bourgeoisie.

Undaunted, however, I proceeded to read aloud the chapter to which I had referred, and in the middle of it James slapped on his hat, said he was going out to a restaurant and slammed the door after him.

While an audience is not necessary to the enjoyment of reading good prose, it is somewhat depressing to be left alone in such a way, so I went across the street and read the whole thing to an old man I saw on a neighbor's veranda.

I found out later that the old man was deaf, but he evidently appreciated the poetry of my expression.

Gradually James's lack of deeper spiritual emotions wore upon me to such an extent that I used to go away from the house for months at a time and expand my nature in the society of congenial souls, and finally I told James that he was mentally and spiritually unfit for me to associate with.

WHY I LEFT MY WIFE

JANET is a black-haired girl with a fatuous expression. When I first met her she talked to me for several hours about her complex psychic nature. I thought she was wonderful then, but now I know it's the usual bunk that sort of girl hands out.

After we were married I would often try to entertain Janet in the evening by reading her the baseball scores and Sam Crane's comments on the game, but she would rudely ask me to shut up and would recite a lot of stuff from a book she was writing.

One night I came home three or four hours late, and found that instead of having waited to cook me another dinner, the first having grown cold, Janet had gone out to a concert.

In the morning Janet explained that the tickets were good only for that evening, while dinners could be made any day.

It was then that I decided to leave Janet forever.

WHY I WENT BACK TO MY HUSBAND.

THE bankroll got very slim and I needed a lot of new things for the Fall.

WHY I WENT BACK TO MY WIFE.

SELDUM SEEZIT SEEKS A SOUL-MATE!

Copyright, 1911, by American-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

(Editor's Note—... the ... readers who are breathlessly following the adventures of this world-famous delicatessen detective and who have learned to love him for his daring, acumen, culture and genius, should throw this ... end of his latest case down in disgust under the belief that he ... man sought the soul mate for himself we hasten to assure these ... of readers at the outset that he sought the soul mate for another. We told the thick headed writer who is putting Mr. Seezit's adventures in literary form that his title was misleading, but he is strong for euphonious titles and so we find it necessary to add this ... note.)

CHAPTER I

"I——"

"Pardon me," interrupted Seldum Seezit, the world-famous delicatessen detective, to the ... dressed man who had been admitted to his ... unannounced, "you were about to remark that you are Ben Zoatte, the ketchup king."

The ... dressed man flushed angrily.

He objected to having his name spoken in that manner because it suggested infringement on the pure food law.

"Kindly do not call me 'Ben Zoatte.' I always think of Dr. Wiley when it is spoken like that. Please call me Benjamin K. Zoatte. As a matter of fact, I built up my entire fortune on the fact that my goods contain no benzoate of soda," said Mr. Zoatte.

"Quite right, quite right," hastily exclaimed our hero, who was keenness itself, and knew at once that this client was well able to pay him an enormous fee.

"A matter of training. I could tell my series of deductions, made in the moment you were entering the room, but I do not care to do so," and our hero hastily closed the magazine lying open before him and which contained, at the place where it was open in the advertising pages, an excellent half-tone likeness of Mr. Zoatte alongside a picture of a bottle of his famous ketchup.

"You came to see me on business," pleasantly suggested Seldum Seezit.

CHAPTER II.

"YOU are right again," exclaimed Mr. Zoatte, in great admiration. "I might as well come directly to the point. It may seem absurd to you, but I want a soul mate!"

"A soul mate?" repeated Seldum Seezit, in a cold, even tone, with all the emotion of a kippered herring. But under his calm exterior he was amazed.

Had Mr. Zoatte asked him to help him pack elephants in oil and put them on the market like sardines, or to get King George to write a testimonial saying he could not sleep without drinking a bottle of Zoatte's ketchup, our hero would not have quivered an eyelash, so well was he trained in keeping an impassive and blank countenance and controlling his emotions.

"Yes, a soul mate," repeated the ketchup king. "Others have them, why not I?"

That was an absurd question to ask, for our hero knew full well that soul mates were a drug on the market, and that they were as easy to acquire as debt, but fifteen times as hard to get rid of. However, it was not for Seldum Seezit, the world-famous delicatessen detective, to admit any task assigned him was easy, and so, after a painful effort, he remarked, sternly: "What you ask of me is indeed a difficult task. Kindly go further into details."

"Now will you find me a soul mate?"

"Oh, there are no details. I leave those all to you," said Mr. Zoatte, airily.

"But her name? Who is this lady—this woman you yearn to make your soul mate?" insisted the great detective.

"Who is she?" snorted Mr. Zoatte in disgust. "Who is she? How the dickens do you suppose I know who she is? If I had her do you suppose I'd come here to get you to help me?"

"Yes, to get rid of her," thought Seldum Seezit, but he was careful not to think aloud.

"Ah, certainly, I understand," he said to the ketchup king. "You have seen some beautiful woman and you wish me to arrange for you to meet her, that you may lead her to the altar."

"You talk like a bottle of ketchup," snarled Mr. Zoatte.

"If I did the purity league would have me pinched," ejaculated our hero, somewhat testily.

"I haven't made it clear"——began Mr. Zoatte.

"The ketchup?" asked our hero, who would have his little joke.

"No!" thundered the multi-millionaire ketchup king.

CHAPTER III.

"I WANT a soul mate. I want one because it is the style. Nearly all the men at my club, the 'Billionaire Bunch,' have acquired soul mates. It advertises them; it is stylish, and it furnishes a lot of amusement.

"But, you see, I am a very busy man. Just now I am cornering the ketchup market in Iceland, Timbuctoo, Samoa, Thibet, Hoboken, Brooklyn and other foreign countries. When that is done I will have a market everywhere except on Mars, Jupiter and Sirius."

"What's the matter with Venus?" suggested our hero.

"She's all right—that is, as I was about to explain, I am such a busy man I cannot take the time and bother to find a soul mate. I want you to go and pick one out for me, do all the talking for me, make her understand I will settle $25,000,000 on her. This will give me the soul mate, the advertising and the prestige in my club, the 'Billionaire Bunch.'"

"What will it be, brunette, blonde, titian? Svelte, embonpoint or medium? Tall and divine, cute and short, or just-to-the-shoulder? Intellectual or practical? Parrot or clam?" asked Seldum Seezit.

"Ah, I am not fussy. I want her to be a stunning looker, kind, intelligent and affectionate. That's all," said Mr. Zoatte, easily.

"Extremely difficult"——began Seldum Seezit, when the ketchup king pulled forth a check book and wrote out a sum that fairly staggered our hero, sober as he was.

"Now will you find me a soul mate?" asked Mr. Zoatte, smiling.

"I'll find you a soul mate if I have to loop the earth for one," said our hero taking the check and accompanying the ketchup king to the door.

"I HAVE it!!!"

These happy words resounded through the spacious library of our hero, Seldum Seezit, the world-famous detective.

For six long weeks he had been seeking a soul mate for Benjamin K. Zoatte, the ketchup king, with no success.

But now he had a splendid idea. He sat down at his desk, took his fountain pen, shook a few drops of ink on the carpets, curtains, books and other furnishings, finally got it started, and dashed off the following:

WANTED—A handsome soul-mate. There's $25,000,000 in it. Make appointment by letter. Address, Matrimony, this office.

Making copies of this he had it inserted in all the leading papers in the city.

A week later while his sixty-two assistants were reading the last of the first tenth of the replies and handing him only the few most promising ones, he again shouted the same words wherewith this thrilling chapter was opened:

"I have it!!!"

Just like that.

He made the appointment with the woman who wrote this particular note. Then he dashed merrily into the office of Benjamin K. Zoatte.

"I gotter, Ben Zoatte," he said, a bit excitedly.

"Benjamin K. Zoatte, if you please," said the ketchup king.

But our hero paid no heed.

"Five foot six, brunette. Blue eyes. Handsome as a doll. Pink cheeks all her own, hair all her own. Cultured, sweet disposition. Likes auto trips and suppers and society. Does not drink, smoke cigarettes or even a pipe, hates pet dogs, can order a swell dinner, can"—— "Lead me to it!" yelled Mr. Zoatte, reaching for his hat.

"My library at 4 o'clock this afternoon," said Seldum Seezit, laughingly pushing the ketchup king back in his chair and playfully kicking his hat across the room and out of the eighty-eighth story window.

"CUCKOO-CUCKOO-CUCKOO-CUCKOO!"

It was the clock.

And a cuckoo clock at that.

At the same moment this little bird announced from the wall of our hero detective's library that it was four o'clock Benjamin K. Zoatte, the ketchup king, burst into the room.

"Where is she?" he exclaimed, looking about.

"Is she?" asked Zoatte.

"Is she a cuckoo?" persisted the ketchup king.

"Who?" insisted our hero, who by this time, it will be realized, was merely parrying for time.

"My soul-mate," eagerly insisted Zoatte.

"Now, look here, Mr. Zoatte," began Seldum Seezit, grinning sternly, "it is barely possible this woman may never become your soul-mate. She may object.

"Money is not everything to this woman. She has had plenty and it did not make her happy."

"I paid you to get me a soul-mate, not to preach," stormed Zoatte. "I've been so lonesome since I separated from my wife I went nearly fit for the dippy house. While my wife was a splendid woman she had no tact, but left me to entertain myself and went around to parties and dances and literary gatherings all alone. I'll admit I was pretty busy the first few years making money and couldn't accompany her. I worked night and day for her, to pile up a fortune for her, and instead of appreciating this fact she got an idea I was tired of her. Now I have made my millions I will try to make up for this lack of home life and lack of—well, I'm for Roosevelt; I want the woman to be happy but I want to be a little bit happy, too, and if"——.

Zoatte stopped talking and listened. He turned pale, then red. There was the sound of a sob from behind the great Japanese screen in a corner of the room.

Making gestures excitedly he pointed at the screen and whispered in an angry voice: "Whatcher mean by hiding my soul-mate behind there and letting her hear me make an ass of myself, talking like this? It is her, is it not?"

"It is your soul mate all right, all right," said our hero detective, and with a deft movement he withdrew the screen and in a flash the beautiful woman stood before Benjamin K. Zoatte, the ketchup king.

"Evelyn, my wife! !" he yelled.

"Yes, you big nincompoop, you didn't recognize a detailed description of your own wife," said Seldum Seezit. "When it comes to soul-mates, she is the only one for you. You get more advertising than you would by marrying another woman, because marrying soul-mates is much more common than remarrying your former wife."

ADVENTURES OF HAROLD HANGOVER

By William F. Kirk

CHAPTER XLV.

In Which Harold Hangover Becomes a White Hope.

IT was early dawn on Washington Heights. The first pink flush of another tough day for New Yorkers was spreading itself athwart the East. The little sparrows were chirping their morning matins, and the first ray of the glorious sun, reluctantly keeping schedule time, gilded the dome of an old clothes man.

The American League Park is situated near One Hundred and Sixty-eighth street and Broadway. During the ... hours of the day there are thousands of pedestrians flitting hither and yon—fair wives beating down the grocers and brave husbands wheeling their offspring. But in the first hour of the day, when the sparrows chirp, the neighborhood in question is well nigh deserted, save for an occasional milkman making his furtive rounds with his lightweight milk.

On this particular morning a tall, stalwart figure might have been seen moving toward the park where Clark Griffith used to rule as chieftain.

"It's some grade from One Hundred and Forty-fifth street up to this layout," puffed Harold Hangover, because it was he indeed. "I'd hate to have to do this stunt for a living. I'd hate more, however, to get fat. I must not get fat—I must not! What would my manager think? What would my affinity think—my little girl that I met milking cows in the suburbs of Detroit? Nothing is so vulgar as a fat man. I must lose that three pounds."

"Some town, this!" he exclaimed, half to himself, half to a tall, gloomy person who was walking along not more than a step ahead of our hero.

"I never could see it, myself," growled his new companion. "Kansas City for mine! Nobody that is born in this burg is no good. Show me a born New Yorker and I'll show you a simp."

"Perchance you may be correct in your estimate," said Harold Hangover. "I know but few New Yorkers. I am not a New Yorker."

"I should hope not," snorted the mysterious stranger. "You look too good. Have you got the price for a silver fizz apiece? This tramping certainly gets one's coppers hot. It would be all right if I were out in Kansas City, where I know everybody, but here in the East I don't know a soul."

"We might have one little dram," suggested the ... hero of this tale, "but I seldom drink with strangers. Let us try yonder tavern."

The small German inn indicated by our hero was but a short distance from the boulevard, and thither they thithered.

A short, stolid German was just opening up for the day, taking stock and wiping the glasses which he had set out on the bar.

"Just like good old Milwaukee!" exclaimed Harold Hangover, letting his eyes roam over the establishment. "My good man, we are travelers with two swell thirsts and would fain have a fizz apiece, with plenty of silver in each of the aforesaid."

"Vot iss?" asked the drowsy proprietor, regarding Harold and his chance friend with no little suspicion.

"Two gin fizzes!" exclaimed the strange pedestrian. "Gin, gin, g-i-n!"

"Oh, chinn," said the Teuton. "Sure we got it, aber it in the basement iss."

"What's that behind you?" asked Harold Hangover, indicating a bottle near the cash register.

"Sure, dot iss chinn, too," agreed the proprietor. "Shall you have it with seltzer?"

"My dear sir," explained Harold Hangover, trying to retain his poise and his patience; "my dear, sir, what we crave is a mixture known as a silver fizz. If you do not know how to make the mixture I will explain. Take a mixing glass, put in two spoonfuls of sugar, a little lemon juice, the whites of two eggs and enough gin for two thirsty travelers. Add a little cracked ice and frappe the mixture as much as possible under the circumstances. That is all. Now go ahead."

"But we don't got no eggs," said the proprietor.

"Eggs are so easy to get that they are becoming a drug on the market," said Harold, loftily. "Here is some change. Why don't you send that colored boy out?"

"Sure," replied the proprietor, smiling in a friendly way when he saw the yellow twenty-dollar bill tendered him by our hero. "Sure, he knows where isa eggs. Here, Tom," he added, addressing a burly negro who was washing the ... [illegible] eggs for dese chentlemen. Mach schnell!"

The moments rolled by and still Harold Hangover waited, and still no porter and no eggs. The mysterious stranger had excused himself shortly after the departure of the porter and Harold was beginning to get fidgety.

"Maybe if you don't like chinn mitoudt eggs, how about some schnapps?" asked the proprietor.

"It isn't that," explained Harold, "but how about my twenty?"

"He comes schnell, maybe," soothingly ...

Just then the roving and restless gaze of Harold Hangover lit on a distant object—a dark ... running rapidly toward Amsterdam avenue. Always a quick thinker, Harold divined instantly that it was the porter going south with his change!

Realizing in an instant that he could not overtake the fleet black before the latter reached a surface car, he hastily grabbed a "sneeze" ball from his coat pocket, rubbed fresh snuff on it and cut loose with the ... The ball sped true as a die, curving around the treacherous porter's nose. The porter sneezed, fell in his tracks and fainted. Harold's change was safe!

A PRIMER FOR THE SUMMER GIRL

By Dorothy Dix

Copyright, 1911, by American-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved

WHAT are these strange creatures, Ma-ma?

They are Summer Tourists, my child.

Where did they come from, Ma-ma?

From the wild and woolly provinces, my child.

Who caught them, Ma-ma?

They were lassoed by the railroads by means of cheap excursions, my child.

What makes their throats so long, Ma-ma?

They belong to the genus rubberneckis, my child.

Why are their eyes so big, Ma-ma?

The better to see the Great White Way, my child.

Why are their ears so long, Ma-ma?

The better to listen to the megaphone man, my child.

Are the Summer Tourists can-ni-bals, Ma-ma?

Oh, no, my child. They are what the hotels and theatres live upon in the Summer, my child.

Did the Summer Tourists bring along their wives when they came to New York, Ma-ma?

Those did who look grouchy and sad, my child.

Did the ones who wear a cheerful mien leave their wives at home, Ma-ma?

Oh, yes, my child, they came upon a pleasure excursion.

Oh, see, Ma-ma, just by looking at them I can tell which ones of the Summer Tourists have left their wives and little ones at home!

You are quite right, my child, and it pleases me to see that you are so observing.

What are the habits of the Summer Tourists, Ma-ma?

They differ in different places, my child, and their habits in New York are quite unlike what they are when they are on their native heath.

What does the Summer Tourist feed upon, Ma-ma?

At home it feeds upon cereals and weak tea, but when it is in New York its diet consists of lobster and highballs.

Is the Summer Tourist a tame animal, Ma-ma?

At home it is the most domestic animal in captivity, but when it gets to New York it becomes very wild and sportive.

How strangely the air of New York affects the Summer Tourists, Ma-ma!

It is one of the peculiarities of the climate that science has been unable to explain, my child.

Oh, see, Ma-ma, there is such a nice-looking Summer Tourist, with long, gray whiskers like a billy-goat.

That is the variety known as the Prominent Citizen, who is a Deacon in the Church at Home, my child.

He has such a cheerful expression, Ma-ma. Is his wife along with him?

Oh, no, my child. He told his wife that he would have so loved to have brought her along, but that he was summoned suddenly to New York on business.

Oh, yes, my child; his rheumatism does not trouble him here as it does at home. Besides, his wife's eye is not upon him.

Oh, look, Ma-ma, how kind and gentle he is, and how he turns the other side of his face to the beautiful young lady who chucked him under the chin.

He is very easy, my child.

Is he pleased because the beautiful young lady notices him, Ma-ma?

He is tickled to death, my child.

What will he do to show his gratitude to the beautiful young lady who is so kind to him, Ma-ma?

He will hire a taxi and take her to the ... restaurant in town and buy her a fine dinner and open wine, my child.

Can he afford this, Ma-ma?

Oh, yes, my child, because his wife is cutting down the grocery and butcher bill when Papa is away from home to save expenses.

Will he tell his wife when he goes home about the beautiful young lady who was so kind to him, Ma-ma?

Oh, no, my child. All that he will tell her will be how Lonely he was in the great city, and about what an Inspiring Prayer Meeting he attended.

Oh, yes, my child, that particular va-ri-ety of Summer Tourists in some respects resembles the camel. It has to tank up when it comes to New York with enough cocktails and highballs to last it until it gets back again, for its home is as dry as the desert.

Oh, look, Ma-ma, at this other Summer Tourist, who has on a white shirtwaist, and a black skirt, and a queer hat, and who resembles the funny fashion pictures.

That is the female of the species, my child.

What a severe countenance she has, Ma-ma!

She travels to improve her mind, my child, and is known as the Terror of Bell Hops.

Is she very brave, Ma-ma?

Her courage knows no bounds, my child, for she refuses to tip the waiters in the restaurants and the porters on the Pullman.

How does she amuse herself, Ma-ma?

Her chief diversion is going slumming, my child. She goes to all of the places that are said not to be safe for a woman to go to. She has heard that New York is a Den of Iniquity and she is determined to see if it is true.

What will she do when she goes home, Ma-ma?

She will read a paper on "What I Saw in Chinatown" before the Ladies' Mutual Improvement Society.

What else does the female Tourist do, Ma-ma?

Oh, yes, my child, as long as they have any money.

And what does it do to them, Ma-ma?

Why do the Summer Tourists come to New York, Ma-ma?

By A. JOSH, Doctor of Gravity, Fellow of the Rollicking Geographical Society, Encyclopaedic Explorer, Etc, Etc, Etc.

PUBLISHER'S NOTE

Several things have happened since the old world began to hang around the solar system, and there may be a few people who have forgotten some of those things. For this reason the publishers have aimed to make this a history that will prove unlike all others and at the same time enable the careful student to learn everything by means of a few glances through these pages.

CHAPTER I.
GEOGRAPHY.

GEOGRAPHY, as you will remember, is the only book that afforded us relief in our early school days, as behind its wide covers we could eat candy, read novels or wink at the girls who sat nearest us.

Lest you were eccentric enough to use it for any other purposes, you will naturally now need a brief course in this delightful study, the range of which is wider than anything else, except astronomy and a woman's reason.

As to the poles, we are not at all certain about the South Pole, inasmuch as no one of our acquaintance has seen it. But we are all to the good regarding North Poles. We have two of them, one discovered by Cook and another by Peary. Each of these poles was discovered first.

Until such time as a bunch of explorers with cold feet come rushing into our midst wearing rose wreaths, or telling of having left their records, or shouting "Liar!" and "Faker!" and each proving us alone discovered the South Pole, we will have to struggle along with only the two North Poles of which we are so certain. But the day will come, friend student, when we can proudly boast of two or three South Poles, as we do to-day of two North Poles.

It is now going to be necessary to speak of the earth as "our earth." We frankly admit that to be a misnomer, but force of habit makes it necessary. Any one desirous of learning the ownership of the earth need only track a few pipe lines to their sire. It is not for us to do this, as this is a history, not a muck-rake article.

Our earth is composed of two hemispheres, eastern and western. They call the eastern hemisphere the "old world," but as a matter of fact they are just beginning to get their eyes opened over there. The eastern and western hemispheres have been situated practically opposite each other for quite a period.

Our earth is composed of land, water, hot air and promises.

We have many mountains. Some have been climbed, and then again there is Mt. Nicholas.

We have water, good for bathing purposes and milkmen. It is also one of the chief items of the Ice Trust, and without it no corporation could double its dividends.

We get copper from the Copper Trust and the Police Department; iron from the Steel Trust, and on our laundry in small stains, gold from our local foundries, and paper from our trees. Any one of us secure any quantity of paper by merely paying whatever the Pulp Trust sees fit to charge for it.

As a matter of fact we have everything we want in this world, it only being necessary to pay three or four times what it is worth to get it.

Having gone into great detail over the geography of our earth, we will now turn to the actual history of our earth.

CHAPTER I
SOME EARLY HAPPENINGS

A GENTLEMAN named Adam and a lady named Eve are popularly supposed to have had thrust upon them the gigantic task of getting our old earth livened up a bit, in the way of population.

Of course, it is a bit embarrassing for us to explain why the first couple should not have the same name, inasmuch as marriage makes both names alike, and that's about all.

However, let us not start the anvil chorus, for remember this, all of us are considerably related to that picturesque trouble (the word "trouble" was written by mistake; we intended to say "couple," but on second thought will let it go as it is).

It is true that "Town Topics" would have gloated over that little apple incident, but why bother ourselves over a bit of lively scandal? Didst ever eat an apple, good air or fair lady?

At any rate, there were none to point the finger at Adam and Eve, and that helped some.

This well-known and popular couple owned an estate in Asia. If you should go to Asia you would find all sorts of climate and all sorts of people and all sorts of trouble to-day. But there is no need to hasten away to that country, inasmuch as we have all these things right at home.

It was not Adam who said "After me the deluge," but he might have said it, inasmuch as it did come after him—due to a wide after him, in fact. From the flood dates the history of the menagerie. Before that time, as far as we know, the animals were not traveling on any exhibiting animals.

Ashur was afraid some one would play in his backyard, so he built a wall 100 feet high around his city, but he wouldn't have had it done yet if the labor unions were in full organization at that time. Not to be outdone, Nimrod built the first skyscraper.

But it always takes a woman to put the kibosh on anything, as Carlyle or some one so aptly said. And so Queen Semiramis, who ruled Assyria and designed the gardens of Babylon, decided she would conquer the earth, and therefore set the styles herself. Having no knowledge of forming a trust, the simple-minded woman sought to defeat her biggest rival in the way of rulers, the King of the Indies. She had no elephants, but plenty of camels, and so, with the unerring feminine instinct, she sought to deceive.

She had five thousand cattle killed (some of this beef we find to-day put up for the army, the camp and the fireside in tins), and the hides of these beeves she had made into imitation elephant skins.

Thus equipped she dressed her camels in hobble skirted elephant skins, or imitation skins, and went forth to battle. At the signal of charge the camels got a hump on themselves, but tripped on their hobble skirts, and so the battle was lost.

Poor Queen Semiramis escaped, but she lost three coronet braids, a quart of hairpins and tore her best dress. She was never quite the same woman afterward.

Then through Asia and that neck of the woods there followed for many generations such scenes as only a native of South America can understand or appreciate. There were revolutions every few minutes. Kings came and went. They came all right, but when they went they were carried away. The Medes and the Babylonians jointly destroyed Nineveh, and then a country yap named Cyrus destroyed Babylon and became ruler of Persia.

Soon after this came Xerxes spelled in this manner to give ten per school children paresis. Xerxes was the niftiest of them all. He had a standing army that to this day makes Emperor Nick, King Geo and Kaiser Bill wild with envy. His army contained as many soldiers as there are residents of New York today, and so it is no wonder this he managed to defeat three hundred Spartans at Thermopylae.

Xerxes was a bit balmy in his bean and wrote mash notes to a mountain. Even his tenderest lines failed to move the mountain. He even had the naughty sea whipped, but that didn't seem to help any. Finally Xerxes died in bed—by request.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

Another all-star vaudeville show is an[illegible]

[illegible] Theatre. Rose Coghlan will appear in a new dramatic sketch entitled "Between Matinee and Night." This piece tells an intensely interesting and at the same time amusing story of the side of theatrical life of which the public has little or no knowledge. One of the most pretentious novelties in all vaudeville is Joseph Hart's "Bathing Girls," a tabloid musical revue in which a dozen scenes of dazzling splendor are unfolded. [illegible] the girl from Dixie, will bring her famous imitations, including "The Baseball Girl." A genuine novelty will be Staley and Birbeck in their great musical transformation act, and other big features are Wynn and Rawson, the [illegible] boys, Alf Grant and Ethel Hoag, "Something doing all the time," Joe Kelsey, the [illegible] man, and Heyden Brothers, acrobats.

Grand Opera House

The romantic comedy drama of life beyond the Rockies, "The Cowboy and the Thief," which is the attraction at the Grand Opera House this week, is a play of dramatic strength, full of the life and vigor of the broad Western ranges. The story is one of brotherly love, where one brother goes to the limit to save another, who has hit the downward trail and become the leader of a band of cattle thieves. There is also a sweet little love story between a healthy minded Western girl and a bashful cowboy.

Gaiety Theatre.

The Behman Show, one of the best burlesque shows on the road this season, will be the attraction at the Gaiety for one week, commencing tomorrow. The Behman Show is a two-act musical comedy entitled "The Broadway Girl." Miss Florence Mills, who plays the title part, is a charming actress with pretty face and fascinating [illegible] who sings and dances her way right into the heart of everyone. Miss Mills also wears a number of stunning gowns. The supporting company is one of exceptional merit. It includes such well known people as Mr. Albert Reed, Harry S. Fraser, Ezra Walck, Harry Le Vine, Jacob Weber, Charles Falke, the [illegible] tenor, the Watson sisters, Jane Carothers, Jean Knot, Alice Impey and [illegible] Richards. The chorus is of sixty girls and [illegible]

Park Theatre.

Zelda Sears is finding it easy going at the Park Theatre, where "The Nest Egg" is drawing big audiences. Miss Sears' first starring venture in Boston is bringing its own reward in the shape of box office receipts that put everybody connected with the theatre in a happy frame of mind.

Boston Theatre.

"The Round Up" will begin a new week at the Boston Theatre tomorrow, and will [illegible] its prosperity. This is one of the few plays on the American stage that holds public interest year after year, and its record during its first week at the Boston indicates that it is as strong as ever with people who like good, healthy melodrama.

Colonial Theatre.

Raymond Hitchcock and his merry company of more than a hundred [illegible] and dancers enter upon their second triumphant week in Boston at the Colonial Theatre tomorrow night in "The Red Widow." The musical excellence of the piece is indeed a surprise. The brilliant chorus women and [illegible] features have taken Boston by storm and the supporting company is one of unusual merit. Miss Sophie Barnard in the leading soprano role and Theodore Martin in the tenor part have been accorded the enthusiastic approval.

Tremont Theatre.

The Tremont Theatre continues crowded at every performance of "Excuse Me," and [illegible] farce begins the fourth week of its engagement tomorrow. Bostonians returning from Summer resorts [illegible] Labor Day gave emphatic evidence of [illegible] heard of the merits of this production. "Excuse Me" has proved itself a hit [illegible] and its novelty. [illegible] presentation will [illegible] keep the Tremont [illegible] crowded at every performance for a long time to come.

Hollis St. Theatre.

Helen Ware will begin the second week of her engagement tomorrow night at the Hollis Street Theatre, where she is appearing in George Broadhurst's new play "The Price." There will be matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

"The Price" is a play with a big appeal to [illegible]. The trials of Ethel Toscan [illegible] worked out both by Miss Ware and the playwright that they appeal with positive effect to the audience.

Shubert Theatre.

"Over Night" continues on its jolly way at the Shubert Theatre. One of the best [illegible] that has ever visited Boston, patrons of the Shubert are finding it more than [illegible] an evening of entertainment. "Over Night" is made up of [illegible] laugh-provoking scenes.

A cablegram from Dublin states that the pieces to be played by the Irish National Theatre Company on the opening night of the new Plymouth Theatre in Eliot street on September 23, are "The Shadow of the Glen," a one-act comedy by the late J. M. Synge, and "Birthright," a two-act tragedy by T. C. Murray, one of the [illegible] of [illegible] Irish National Theatre, Dublin.

"The Shadow of the Glen" is one of the best of Synge's shorter plays. It is an arresting and original [illegible] deep impression [illegible] of London and Paris.

PIANO SALE

DON'T PAY TRUST PRICES

FOR ANY MAKE PIANO

I have been telling the people for years that it is not necessary to pay luxury prices to the Piano Trust for pianos. A piano is no longer a luxury. I have taken it out of that class. I have made it as easy to secure a piano (by reducing the price and making the terms of purchase liberal) as it is to secure any other household necessity.

I have educated the public on piano values to such an extent that the intelligent man or woman, who knows how to go about it, can now buy a piano for much less than it could be bought for three years ago. I am in receipt of letters daily from all over New England, pressing me for to stand against the Piano Trust, and I am selling more pianos at lower prices ... It pays to protect the public.

Don't buy any make piano till you see me.

Truthfully,

(Signed) J. P. COLLINS,
Founder of Roxbury Piano Storage Salesrooms Co.

We Have No Use for Half-Way Men.

By HERBERT KAUFMAN.

(Copyright, 1911, by Herbert Kaufman.)

A tree can't take root and bear fruit in the same season. Crops that ripen quickest are replanted soonest.

Nature takes her time when she wants to turn out a good job, and so must you.

Nothing done in a hurry can last for very long. If you don't control your patience you won't command success.

You can't fix the precise day and the exact place in which to win, but if you hold to a sound principle long enough you'll grow strong enough to demonstrate its worth.

If your faith in yourself isn't equal to your hope for yourself get to your proper level right now and become reconciled to the idea of plodding out the rest of your life serving better wills.

Force is even more important than knowledge. Action develops experience—experience is the basis of correct knowledge—unexploited information is worthless.

Wells are only holes in the ground if they don't reach clear to water.

Bridges represent wasted labor and timber if they don't span a stream. We have no use for half-way means, measures or men.

In 1119 society was unbalanced. The world was topsy-turvy. Might was a physical force. Hands and feet dominated.

This is the year 1911. ... and ... are the master keys. Status isn't fixed by inheritance nor by brutality, but by competition. But both periods share at least one basic ideal—COWARDS SHALL NOT RULE.

The world never before had so much contempt for a quitter, because never before was there so little excuse for despair.

You enjoy more advantages than all your ancestors. You exercise every liberty—no honorable avenue of endeavor is denied you.

With electricity, steam, mechanics and thousands of toil-shortening devices, with public libraries at every turn ready to furnish you with facts upon any subject, you have more aids of more sorts than a whole baker's dozen of your grandfathers.

As old Cyrus Simmons used to say: "A man is like an apple—he ain't worth a tinker's dam while he's green. He must wait and ripen before he offers himself in the market. If he lets go too soon it's a sign he ain't sound at heart."

MILLIONAIRE CRANE CRITICISES COLLEGE LIFE; HITS HARVARD STUDENTS

Chicago Investigator Calls Attention of Officials to Conditions as Disclosed by His Search, Directing His Indictment Against Municipal Authorities as Well as Against the Heads of the Colleges

NINETY per cent. of the students at Harvard [illegible] freshman year, [illegible] per cent. in their senior year [illegible] cent. of them go irretrievably to the bad, according to a report of an investigation just made public by R. T. Crane, [illegible] former manufacturer of Chicago.

The report, which is printed in the current issue [illegible] World, owned by Mr. Crane, describes unspeakable [illegible] tion in Boston. It is fully as much an arraignment of the [illegible] government of Boston that permits such amazing [illegible] of Harvard.

It is a story of drunkenness, immorality, brawling [illegible] ess spending of money in Boston cafes that seems [illegible] in connection with the high character of American [illegible] ege.

The remorseless indictment is not directed against [illegible] alone. Columbia is worse, and Yale, Princeton [illegible] nearly as bad, it is declared.

While the investigation, the result of which is just [illegible] de, was conducted eight years ago this Fall [illegible] shown by the Sunday AMERICAN within the past year [illegible] as to support the main contentions of Mr. Crane [illegible] rigid enforcement of the law by the Boston Licensing Board [illegible] police department.

Not only in the cafes in Boston is the dissipation [illegible] but in the gilded clubs in the shadow of the famous [illegible] structures. If the conditions are the same to-day, or [illegible] mately so, as narrated by Mr. Crane, it is high time that [illegible] of Boston and the authorities of Harvard put a stop to it.

Mr. Crane is one of Chicago's most successful [illegible] business men. He has spent much time and [illegible] higher, or college education. So bitter is he [illegible] eres that colleges do more harm than good.

Whatever may be the opinion of the public as to the pessimistic conclusion, there can be but one voice as to [illegible] orgies of college students as Mr. Crane charges [illegible] —and that is, that prompt and vigorous measures should be [illegible] to make them impossible by stamping out the dives where [illegible] occur.

By R. T. CRANE.

REFERENCE has been made in former articles to an investigation of conditions at Harvard University. I did not expect to publish this report, because it is too disgusting to print, but recently a [illegible] from a prominent newspaper for a copy of it has suggested its publication at this time, in order to present a [illegible] of this [illegible] [illegible]

I [illegible] to place before the public this report in detail because it is so misinformed [illegible] blind to the moral conditions that exist at the colleges that I deem it my duty to place the facts before the public.

However, the details are too disgusting to print. [illegible] had not [illegible] that the [illegible] report [illegible] [illegible] that it relates [illegible] confine [illegible] to a summary of the things disclosed [illegible] and then [illegible] from the report, when that proves [illegible] illuminating.

The period of investigation was the fourteen [illegible] beginning Sunday, November [illegible], 1903 [illegible] December [illegible] 1903. [illegible]

[illegible] is [illegible] indicated [illegible]

the contents are claimed to be private property.

An outsider can scarcely realize the amount of drinking that goes on in the club rooms of the college. Accordingly the percentage which is found in town must not be taken as final. Furthermore, Boston, as an environ of Cambridge, must not be [illegible] as the sole cause of the [illegible] of the vast majority of students who take to dissipation. I presume that the same condition of affairs would exist at a college of Harvard's dimensions regardless of its location.

The pool rooms in the Square can hardly be called schools for crime, though many hours during the [illegible] are wasted by the average student of Harvard.

Although it is not generally known, I have positive proof that so much on the spot ball is often the order of the day. The man who puts the [illegible] ball in the designated side pocket, [illegible] ing to the game, receives a [illegible] from each of the players.

The Number Who Fall.

In response to my question whether [illegible] could not give some idea as to the percentage of students who carried drinking and debauchery to excess, he replied as follows:

After conferring with many friends in different walks of college life at Harvard and after making numerous observations and examining reports, I am able to give you the following estimates, which I believe hit the nail on the head and should now put you on a sure footing. These figures, I believe, are as accurate as any figures could be short of two or three years of the most painstaking investigation.

On the basis of one hundred students:

	Per cent
Who drink liquor of some kind in freshman year	90

Conditions at Other Colleges.

I do not doubt that an even worse state of affairs exists at other colleges. I have been around the other universities to a considerable extent as manager of two of the university athletic organizations and know to a certain extent the existing conditions. At Princeton it is beer, beer, beer. The town is license and the body of students [illegible] drink even more than do Harvard men. On one occasion I believe there must have been over two hundred students dead drunk.

At Yale [illegible] is recognized to so great a degree that [illegible] have their tables [illegible] the bar rooms. I was never so struck [illegible] when I found New Haven [illegible] whiskey town [illegible]

Sometime [illegible] statement [illegible] heard in New Haven, [illegible] paper that there were 2,000 fallen women in that city.

At Cornell the conditions are somewhat the same, although I believe that Cornell students do not carry to [illegible] excesses so far as do the boys at Princeton, Yale and Cambridge. The [illegible] students are great on beer as are [illegible] at Princeton. At [illegible] there is more of the fraternity life [illegible] at any other large university in the country, and consequently the needs of the students are catered to in private.

At Columbia I believe there exists more debauchery than at any other co[illegible]

Th[illegible] of international prominence, on the National Committee which [illegible] control of the transcontinental flight. They are Mayor John F. Fitzgerald and Thomas W Lawson. They represent Boston on the National Committee.

PLANS START AT GOVERNOR'S ISLAND.

[illegible] from New York relate the pr[illegible] J. Ward [illegible] are preparing to put on special trains to accommodate the crowds. It is expected [illegible] days when the aviators start from [illegible] New York will be social holidays. It is [illegible] there will be no other [illegible] affecting the development of aviation. He is particularly keen on this coast-to-coast competition which no less an authority than Hudson Maxim describes as "the most wonderful thing the world has ever seen."

If "Jimmy" Ward on his great flight of 4,500 miles across the American continent starts from the very heart of New York it will give millions of persons a splendid opportunity to see him soar away toward the Pacific coast.

The Battery will accommodate thousands, the shores on the western and eastern sides of the Hudson river will be crowded by countless numbers, and those of Long Island, New Jersey and Staten Island will be packed. The roofs and the windows of the skyscrapers of lower Manhattan will be excellent improvised grand stands.

The interest in the start of the flight is so great that already persons who have offices in the Singer Building, in the City Investing Building, the Hudson Terminal and all the other tall buildings are receiving letters from their relatives and friends who live in sections far from New York City.

So thoroughly aw[illegible] to the importance [illegible] that the various railway lines running into the city are preparing to put on special trains to accommodate the crowds. It is expected [illegible] days when the aviators start from [illegible] New York will be social holidays. It is [illegible] there will be no other [illegible]

D[illegible] the days when Atwood was expected to come down the Hudson on the final lap of his great flight, the various ferryboats crossing the Hudson and running between Manhattan and Staten Island and Brooklyn were so crowded that it was sometimes impossible to carry the load.

The popularity of the ferryboats as points of vantage for the curious has provided the thrifty speculators with a hint. Many of the public and private crafts in and about New York city have been tentatively engaged to carry sightseers at a price. From the smallest motor boat, with a capacity of four to eight persons, to the great shore line steamers, crafts of all kinds filled with patient watchers will cruise about the harbor and lower part of the river.

Ward will be ready to fly on Wednesday. Only a gale will prevent him. In order to take advantage of every minute of time, he will soar away probably between 7 and 8 in the morning.

He made his last exhibition flight under the management of Glenn H. Curtiss at Olean, N. Y., Thursday afternoon. Immediately afterward the old biplane, which he has flown so long, was dismantled and [illegible] train to Hammondsport which [illegible] distance to the north. Here he found his new coast-to-coast craft practically in readiness. It [illegible] simply some adjustment [illegible] make while he is supervising the final work.

Aeroplane Must Fit Flyer.

An aeroplane is built to fit the man who flies it, and it is frequently necessary to make many changes for an experienced airman. The veteran flyer has habits of handling a craft which are so ingrained that all his machines must be built to conform to them. It is a matter of a swing of the shoulders in this direction or the thrust of the push rod in that direction or the position in which the various switches and cut-offs are placed.

These are some of the things Ward will have to look after personally to-day at the Curtiss factory. It will also be necessary to see that the machine fits him perfectly. The craft must fit him literally, particularly in view of the long journey he expects to make in it. The fit of an aeroplane is determined by the disposition of its weight.

Flyer's Life May Be the Cost.

Generally the centre of balance is fourteen inches back of the centre of the lower plane surface. This is the pivotal point around which all the weight of the craft is arranged. The operator sits over the centre of balance.

In order that a perfect balance may be found, or, in other words, that the operator may be perfectly fitted, he takes his seat in the craft and by a series of experiments it is determined just how much the centre is out of alignment. Usually the fit is achieved by pushing the motor a fraction of an inch forward or backward. If this fit is not accomplished properly, there is always danger that the operator may fall to his death when attempting a difficult turn. For a flight such as Ward will attempt the fit [illegible] be absolutely true.

Ward and Curtiss will work over the machine with infinite care to see that it is braced by wires at least three times as much as the usual craft.

Machine in New York To-day.

The biplane Ward will fly is designed to be the machine that will make the flight from coast to coast. There will be nothing lacking on the manufacturer's part. Curtiss telephoned to Manager Bloom that the Ward craft is the best he has ever produced. The machine is expected to be in New York either to-day or to-morrow if [illegible]

In order that Ward [illegible] all emergencies, Manager Bloom advised him to obtain at least four times as many extra parts as were originally ordered. Despite almost anything that may happen, the little aviator is to be ready to continue with the least delay. Another Curtiss motor has been ordered which will be in Chicago within a week. Besides the whole new motor, many extra cylinders and other parts have been made ready, which will be carried on a special train.

This train is to consist of a combination sleeping car and diner, in which Ward, his manager and his entourage will live during the whole trip. There will also be a parlor [illegible] to carry the friends of the party who [illegible] desire to follow the flyer for short intervals from point to point.

One baggage car will be used as a storehouse for fuel, oil, water and the extra plane and motor parts, and another will be equipped as a workshop. In this car the mechanicians will do much of the necessary repair work while the train is rolling over the country in pursuit of the aviator.

The national committee, which will have general control of the flight contest for the Hearst prize was completed by the appointment of the members who will represent Los Angeles and San Francisco. The ten men who will decide all points of dispute a[illegible] will supervise all matters concerning the competition at the principal cities involved, represent the leading business, professional and scientific interests in the country.

PRIZE WORTHY OF THE FEAT, SAYS MAYOR

"I am delighted to be selected as a judge for this contest which means so much for the encouragement of the science of aviation. This flight ought to demonstrate more than anything yet attempted the possibilities of the flying machine in the field of commerce and as a potent agent in warfare. Several years ago the mention of such a contest would have seemed ridiculous. It shows how civilization is advancing. I have no doubt that at least one of the aviators will be able to accomplish he flight.

"The feat of Mr Atwood in flying from St. Louis to New York, a distance of 1,265 miles, takes the contest from the realms of mere possibility into the field of certain accomplishment.

"Certainly much credit must be given to Mr. Hearst for his efforts to encourage this wonderful science. The prize is worthy of the feat. I hope all of the aviators will be able to cover the course without mishap, and I can say that I feel it an honor to be selected as one of the officials for this memorable event."—Statement by Mayor Fitzgerald.

LAWSON CALLS GREAT RACE A WORLD EVENT

To the Sunday AMERICAN, Mr Lawson said:

"This will be the biggest event in aviation that has ever taken place in the world. Mr. Hearst has come forward with a race that is not going to demonstrate who can make the most circles in the air, but will demonstrate the practicability of the aeroplane and the nerve and courage of the aviators.

"He should be commended and backed up by every man interested in aviation, for he is doing something for his country.

"I am not interested in much of anything just now, that is flying around in the stock market or anywhere else, but I am mighty interested in this race, and would gladly serve in any capacity Mr. Hearst wants me to, to help make the event the most notable in aviation affairs of the country.

"Although the race will have its dangers for the men, I believe confidently that one or more will be right at the finish to collect Mr Hearst's check for $50,000, and I want to be there to witness the finish and slap the winner on the back and yell, 'Bravo!'

"I wonder if the judges will be called upon to accompany the aviators. Of course, I have been down to Squantum and other places and know when I see good air flying. I haven't qualified for sky pilot, but I am game and if that is one of the duties of the judges in the Hearst race I can get together and settle up my affairs and start with one of the men.

"I know of several nice, live localities right out West that I would like to drop off at, and if I can get a good, quick, safe, free passage I don't know but what I would take a chance.

"Seriously, I believe that Mr Hearst has done the best thing for aviation that any man has ever done, and it will give all the croakers a chance to either be on top at the finish or forever hold their peace.

"You can say I will be where the judges are; on the ground, in the air, or any place they put me. I am for this race and was pleased when Mr. Hearst invited me to serve."

Carl P Rodgers Begins Westward Flight Tuesday, Starting from New York, and He Will Be Followed the Next Day by James J. Ward, While Other Flyers Will Soon Join in Competition

Pacific Coast Representatives.

San Francisco is represented by C. C Moore, president of the World's Fair Commission, and Joseph Rolph, Jr., one of the best known business men and publicists of the city by the Golden Gate.

Mr. Moore is very deeply interested in aviation, being the foremost apostle of a thorough representation of this most modern vehicle of transportation at the Panama Exposition, which will be held in San Francisco in 1915.

As the head of this great enterprise, he has been in correspondence with all the principal aviators of the world for many months. It is his purpose to set aside a whole building for the exhibiton of aircraft and their accessories, as well as to have a mammoth aviation meet at San Francisco during the exposition.

Mr. Rolph is interested in every matter that makes for modern progress. He is particularly interested in all activities of modern science that promise benefits to humanity. He is regarded as the next mayor of San Francisco.

Members for Los Angeles.

The representatives for Los Angeles are Fred L Baker, president of the Auto Club of Southern California, and Robert Marsh chairman of the Business Men's Aviation Purse Committee. Mr. Baker is known wherever there are automobile clubs or organizations that are interested in vehicles driven by motors. As the host of the transcontinental motor car tourists he has won an enviable standing. Go where one will, there are always people who will say fine things about Mr Baker.

He is one of the most enthusiastic members of the committee which received A. L. Westgard, who crossed the continent last Fall, gathering data for the benefit of aviators who compete for Mr. Hearst's prize. Mr. Baker also has taken a prominent part in all the great aviation meets which have been held in Southern California.

Enthusiastic for Los Angeles.

Mr Marsh is the enthusiastic Los Angeles boomer who is at the head of the organization that is raising funds for the aviators who either start their flight or finish at Los Angeles. This organization is supported by the powerful business men's organization of Los Angeles, which is regarded as the most potent of its kind in the country. This group of men regard the flight for the Hearst prize as one of the greatest stimulants for their region that has ever been conceived.

These men are working in co-operation with B. F. Yoakum, chairman of the St. Louis and San Francisco lines, and Hudson Maxim, the foremost explosive expert in America, who represent New York city; Mayor John F. Fitzgerald of Boston and Thomas W. Lawson, the noted financier and sportsman, who represent Boston; Brigadier-General Ramsay D. Potts, commanding the Central Division of the Department of the Lakes, and Rear Admiral Albert Ross commanding the United States naval station at Lake Bluff, who represent Chicago.

Two More Formal Entries.

This is probably one of the most representative bodies of its kind ever assembled to supervise a great enterprise. The standing of the men insures for the aviators absolutely just treatment. The best commercial brains, the highest scientific and professional ability of the country will be used to make the contest a thorough success.

Formal notifications of intention to compete for the $50,000 Hearst prize have been filed by James V Martin of Nassau Boulevard, Long Island, and by Amedee V. Reyburn, Jr., of St. Louis. Both of these entries are conditional, however, upon the ability of the contestants to get their craft ready in time. Mr. Martin is privileged to start on or after September 19, and Mr. Reyburn may start on or after September 17.

Designed His Own Biplane.

Martin is a well known flyer. He is a pupil and protege of Grahame-White. He learned to fly in England, where he made many sensational flights [illegible] His work in this country [illegible] much attention. He has [illegible] meets in Boston, Ch[illegible] and has made many [illegible] Island.

Woman's Danger Periods Made Safe

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs. Here is proof:

Natick, Mass.—"I cannot express what I went through during the Change of Life before I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in such a nervous condition I could not keep still. My limbs were cold. I had creepy sensations and could not sleep nights. I was finally told by two physicians that I had a tumor.

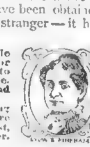
"I read one day of the wonderful cures made by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it, and it has made me a well woman. My neighbors and friends declare it has worked a miracle for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is worth its weight in gold for women during this period of life. If it will help others you may publish this letter."—Mrs. Nathan B. Greaton, 51 No. Main St., Natick, Mass.

ANOTHER SIMILAR CASE.

Cornwallville, N. Y.—"I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for some time for Change of Life, nervousness, and a fibroid growth.

"Two doctors advised me to go to the hospital, but one day while I was away visiting, I met a woman who told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and I know it helped me wonderfully. I am very thankful that I was told to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Wm. Boughton, Cornwallville, N. Y., Greene Co.

The makers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have thousands of such letters as those above—they tell the truth, else they could not have been obtained for love or money. This medicine is no stranger—it has stood the test for years.



For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

The testimonials which are constantly being published in the Pinkham advertisements are guaranteed to be absolutely genuine, honest, and given without reward in any way whatever.

Don't Gouge Out Your Corns

Try "Gets-It"; It's the New Way

So certain, simple, painless and safe is its action that the first trial of "GETS-IT" always produces a profound surprise. It is a corn-cure on a new plan.

It shrivels up the corn, wart, callous or bunion, separates them from the true flesh, the corn comes off, and there you are, with feet that feel positively glorious; corn-free once more as they used to be in your "barefoot days."

The most remarkable feature is that "GETS-IT" does not harm or turn raw the healthy flesh as other preparations do. It is as safe as water. No more plasters, no more bandages, no more salves.

"GETS-IT" is sold at drug stores at 25c a bottle, or sent on receipt of price by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago, Ill. Sold in Boston at all Riker-Jaynes Stores and Keans Pharmacy.

The True Story of Ireland's Fatal Betrayal

Fortunes Were Spent to Kill Home Rule in 1800

One Man Received $115,000 Bribe; Several $75,000 Titles by Wholesale.

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN.

THAT no [illegible] of human interest [illegible] is ever settled [illegible] is made certain [illegible] Ireland at the present moment. [illegible] tions of Ireland with Great Britain were "settled supposedly [illegible] by the so called Act of Union.

Yet today preparations are in [illegible] by the chiefs of [illegible] great political parties in England for a speaking campaign [illegible] than a thousand [illegible] speakers [illegible] every member of [illegible] And the one theme to form the matter of every speech will be Ireland. This more than a hundred years after the Union.

It is twenty-five years or thereabouts since the greatest [illegible] of England in the 19th century told the British people that they were all wrong in their "settlement" of the Irish question in 1800 and that every inch of the ground then [illegible] should be gone over again before the problem of Ireland's government could be brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

Great Statesman Was Not Heeded.

But as Gladstone said himself his "great task was too great" and his warnings and arguments [illegible] as any made in the world's history for any cause were unavailing. Despite defeat the cause for which Gladstone pleaded has survived its powerful defender. That it not only lives but is [illegible] stronger [illegible] than in the days of Gladstone and Parnell is proved amply by the immense propaganda which in a week or two will be holding the attention of the world [illegible] England's constitutional history has a national [illegible]

I shall give it to you now [illegible] Mr Hoar —

"That Act of Union is the worst piece of legislation ever found on the statute books of a civilized nation."

From then onward, till the day of his death, Mr Hoar took the greatest interest in the Home Rule cause and closely followed Mr. Gladstone's advocacy of it. This interest grew with the years, as all friends of Ireland are aware.

The scene which took place in the Irish parliament the night of the final vote for the act of "union," has been graphically described by Sir Jonah Barrington, who was himself a participant in the proceedings. He writes:

> The Commons House of Parliament on the last evening afforded the most melancholy example of a fine independent people, betrayed, divided, sold and, as a state, annihilated.
> British clerks and officers were smuggled into her parliament to vote away the constitution of a country to which they were strangers and in which they had neither interest nor connection. They were employed to cancel the royal chapter of the Irish Nation guaranteed by the British Government, sanctioned by the British legislature and unequivocally confirmed by the words, the signature and the great seal of their monarch.
>
> The situation of the Speaker (Sir John Parnell) on that night was of the most distressing nature; a sincere and ardent enemy of the measure, he headed its opponents; he resisted it with all the power of his mind, the resources of his experience, his influence and his eloquence.
>
> It was, however, through his voice that it was to be proclaimed and consummated. His only alternative (resignation) would have been unavailing and could have added nothing to his character. His expressive countenance bespoke the inquietude of his feeling, solicitude was perceptible in every glance and his embarrassment was obvious in every word he uttered.

> The galleries were filled, but the [illegible] was inevitable; they were no [illegible] crowded with those who had [illegible] accustomed to witness the eloquence [illegible]

CATHOLIC WOMEN TO CONVENE HERE

MEMBERSHIP MULTIPLIES

50,000 New Members a Month Enrolled Since Census Was Taken in January.

One of the largest gatherings of Catholic women ever held in Boston will take place at the convention of the Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Society, to be held in October, of which Miss Katherine Mahoney is the national president.

A reception and banquet will be tendered to the president by the members of the [illegible] branches, who will attend in a body. On the second evening Miss Mahoney will conduct the class initiation. A resume of the work will be given and plans laid for future progress.

The Ladies' Catholic Benevolent Association is the largest organized body of Catholic women in the world. Since its organization it has shown a constantly increasing membership. Since the census taken in January, 1911, 50,000 new members a month have been enrolled.

The work is approved and indorsed by clergymen throughout the United States. They have issued at various times urgent appeals to the women of the church to join the Catholic sisterhood, which was founded for their material assistance, betterment and advancement.

During the past two years, through the effort of Mrs. Mary E. Lind, president of the Dorchester Branch, several local branches have been established throughout Greater Boston. Among the most recent is the South Boston Branch, which includes many of the most representative and prominent women of that district.

A large branch is being formed in Charlestown, which will hold its first meeting during the month, for the election of officers and a board of trustees. Negotiations are under way for the establishment of a branch in Roslindale, which will include several women in the vicinity of Jamaica Plain and the various points of West Roxbury.

A most gratifying report has been received from the State Commissioners upon their examination of the books of the Association. They report it one of the most flourishing organizations in the State.

Dorchester branch—Mrs. Mary E. Lind, president; Mrs. Jennie L. Franklin, first vice president; Mrs. Mary E. Griffin, second vice-president; Mrs. Margaret L. Fitzgibbon, recorder; Miss Gertrude O'Neil, assistant recorder; Mrs. Mary A. J. CATHOLIC CLUB FOR AGED WOMEN'S HOME

Suggestion to Be Discussed by Members of Brockton Association.

As the past year has been the banner year in the club's history, socially and financially, it has been suggested by Mrs. B. Milo Burke, former president of the Twentieth Century Catholic Club of Brockton, that a fund be started as a nucleus of a permanent fund with some one particular charitable object in view.

"Nothing would establish the permanence of a club so surely as to have a definite and stable project for which each new administration would work to increase," says Mrs. Burke, "and the executive board wishes the members to take immediate action on this suggestion. The board suggests a home of aged Catholic women, a sum of money to be laid aside this and each following year until enough has been secured to start the work."

Mrs. J. D. Buckley suggests that a swimming pool for boys be placed at Perkins Park, while Mrs. E. J. Barry, Jr., suggests a home for working girls. Miss [illegible] of Whitman believes that a scholarship fund for High school boys and girls would be an excellent thing. In all probability Mrs. Burke's suggestion will be carried out. The task would be an easy one for the Twentieth Century Club, for it is one of the largest and most powerful in the State.

A. O. H. FORMING NEW MILITARY COMPANIES

ESSEX FIELD DAY SUCCESS

County President Ahearn and Colleagues Are Being Congratulated

Now that the several field days have been held, and successfully carried out, attention will be given to membership and coming social features of the Massachusetts A. O. H. Early preparations will be begun for the St. Patrick's day parade.

In a number of divisions new military companies will be organized as the splendid showing of the two companies from Division 13 of South Boston and the Sarsfield Guards of Charlestown at the recent field day, has greatly encouraged the members of other divisions, and companies will now be speedily formed in all parts of Suffolk County. The field day was the most successful yet held. A conservative estimate of the attendance, as official reports are [illegible] made, is that about 8,000 persons [illegible] present. South Boston is jubilant over the magnificent showing of the Wolf Tone Hurling Club that defeated the champion Tipperary team from New York. Kerry is champion at Gaelic football, for this season at least. The committee is surely entitled to great praise for the success of this field day, and a handsome sum will go into the county treasury.

Essex Field Day.

Essex County members scored a success at the field day held in Danvers. County President Michael J. Ahearn and his colleagues on the committee may well feel proud of the day's record.

When the committee having charge of the field day of Division 13 of Waltham makes its report the building fund will be increased by a handsome sum. Every person present voted that the events were of a first class nature and [illegible] hoped there would be an early repetition.

Middlesex [illegible] Board will meet in Ayer on Sunday, September 24. County President James J. Harold will have a number of important recommendations to make. The members of the division in Ayer will entertain the delegates of the county.

New Military Company

The new military company now being organized by the members of Division [illegible] of City Point will soon be instituted [illegible] equipped [illegible] meeting. A number of the members [illegible] President [illegible] A [illegible] ing of articles in Gaelic. A number of the members are very proficient Gaelic scholars, thus adding to the interest of the meetings.

GIANTS STILL LIVE

DOESN'T this picture take you back to your childhood, when you read and thought about the giants and asked how high the tallest of them was, and whether he could wade through the ocean and step over mountains?

This picture of a giant, made by a German artist for "Jugend," is everything that a child would like a giant to be. He sits on the top of a big mountain smaller than himself and uses an old castle for a footstool. He carries a club a mile long. He could swallow men, horses and oxen whole.

In remembering the dreams of childhood and smiling at the days when we believed that physical giants did exist, and that Jack could climb up the beanstalk to get at them—we should not forget that there are giants more dangerous than the giants of childhood's fancy actually among us still.

But they are giants none the less, even though some of them are small and baldheaded, and, instead of saying, "Fe, Fo, Fi, Fum," hire lawyers to go to court for them and say, "Non vult contendere." There are big giants on the earth now, much more expensive to the people at large than the biggest imaginary giants would have been, had they really existed and been able to eat a thousand oxen in a day.

We have real giants that put a tax on every ox that the people eat, a tax on every chicken, barrel of flour, ton of coal, pound of sugar, on every steel rail, every gallon of oil.

These giants that tax are more powerful, far bigger "eaters" than were the imaginary giants of childhood.

There is lots of work for Jack the Giant Killer in real life to do in the United States now.

Unfortunately, the genuine giant killing Jacks are rare. The modern giant recognizes Jack the Giant Killer when he sees him—and he usually hires him or controls him in some way, and soon Jack the Giant Killer becomes Jack the Giant Admirer or Jack the Giant Representative in the Legislature.

◆ ◆ ◆

Giants still live, and big financial, industrial giants are not the only ones among us. There are others more harmful to the human race than the biggest giant of monopolistic extortion.

Plenty of Work for Jack the Giant Killer Still. And He Can Do Real, Not Imaginary Giant Killing.

The real giants, those that die slowly, that, in fact, never have been killed, are the giants that live in the world of thought.

One of these great giants is named Drunkenness. He is stubborn and hard to fight. And well-meaning prohibitionists who try to play the part of Jack the Giant Killer to the drink giant are in reality his best friends, and do most to keep him alive.

Another big giant in the world of thought, the giant that sits in the high places and has his feet on the homes of man is the giant of Superstition, multiplying hatreds, brutalities, and keeping back brotherhood among men.

But, fortunately, big and powerful as they are, all are smaller than they have been in the past.

The public schools and the millions of little Giant Killers sent out from them are gradually pulling down the strength of old Giant Ignorance.

The newspapers, the publishers of books, keep old Giant Superstition worried. His hold grows feebler upon the brains of men, and those that make a livelihood through Giant Superstition are worried with cause, and do not like newspapers that tell the truth or books that give facts.

The giants are still here, the big giants that have had their feet on the heads and homes of men through the ages. The only giants that ever lived we still have with us, big and powerful, but, luckily, not as big as they were once.

But every man who works against superstition, every man who combats ignorance by spreading knowledge, every man who combats drunkenness by increasing prosperity and denouncing whiskey and the other poisons, is a Jack the Giant Killer, and will be numbered among those that in the end will drive out the giants.

With imagination, you can see many a giant exactly like the one in the picture—for instance, a trust giant sitting above the Senate or the Capitol at Washington, his feet resting on the homes of the little people that pay the taxes. And you can see such a giant, three-headed as some giants described of old, with ignorance, poverty and vice for his three heads.

You cannot wake up any more find a beanstalk growing outside your window, climb up and terrify the giant tribe. But with your talking and your voting, you can be a useful part of the real giant killer which is the sum total of human intelligence and conscientious citizenship.

The Camera as an Idealist

FOREIGN photographers have begun to resent the increasing supremacy of the photographic art in America. For that reason a statement by Dubrkoop, the famous Hamburg photographer, that American women had no idea how to pose and that American photographers had no idea how to accentuate their good points—in fact, only brought out their bad points—has received much attention from the newspapers of Europe.

Now, the American woman is probably the most photographed woman in the world, and most of her photographs are made in America. Every one knows how atrociously ugly a photographer can make his subject, and how the greatest beauties can be made to look like "dowdies" by an unskilful camera man. But so fastidious a creature is the American woman that she demands that all her good points be accentuated. How, then, could it possibly be true that she neither knows how to pose or that American photographers do not know how to take her picture? And how is it possible to take a photograph which will bring out the good points? How can the camera become an idealist?

The Campbell Studios, at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, in New York, have become recognized throughout America as one of the most artistic photographic studios in the world. To the Campbell Studios most of the society women of America and the beautiful women and notables from abroad come to have their portraits taken. In discussing the unchivalrous accusation of Herr Dubrkoop the manager of the Campbell Studios said:

"The secret of really artistic photography is simplicity. I should say that the success we have met not only in New York but in Newport and in our other branches has been due to this.

"I have heard much controversy over the statements made by M. Dubrkoop. I think that Mr. Dubrkoop's nationality affects his point of view. I think that the personality that the artist brings to his work when he meets his subject under the light for the first time has a great deal to do with the results. When Mr. Dubrkoop has photographed American women in his Hamburg studio I question very much whether the subject has been quite

What is Jealousy?

Imagine Yourself Husband to This Dusky Duck-Billed Lady, or Her Friend with the Skillet Lip, or the Society Beauty in the Black Bag—or the Wife of a Man with a Season Ticket at Mlle. Greuze's Theatre.

Yes, You've Got It!

With this assurance, when you look upon the two likenesses of negro [illegible] of the Sara-Kabba tribe—one with a horrible duck-bill mouth and the other with an under lip having [illegible] e of a kitchen [illegible] developed, of course you may be inspired to [illegible] ty so per- verted that these lips, stretched with [illegible] semblance to [illegible] whose features have the comeliness which [illegible] possible [illegible] rtions [illegible] compel their wives to cultivate ugli- [illegible] der that [illegible] of jealousy into his own bosom.

How can a wife ever hope to win other men's admiration when on her bridal day her head is shaved and her own beautiful hair—a woman's [illegible] tures—replaced by a coarse horse- hair wig, as the custom is among [illegible] Jewish immigrants from Central Europe?

Of the same sort is the custom in [illegible] tum of Neapolitan life for the husband, or the lover, of a [illegible] her face with [illegible] his first suspicion of her efforts to win the admiration of his male companions, thus forever [illegible]

These are instances where jealousy is a masculine passion—to save him- self from jealous pangs he even robs [illegible] beauty he has won.

[illegible] investigated the case of the duck-billed and [illegible] ped Sara-Kabba women [illegible] ever, after that these [illegible] often painful deformities [illegible] garded as embellishments [illegible] are therefore [illegible] jealousy producers. They are "dark- est Africa's" [illegible] to the stage beauties of Europe and Amer- ica who are so often charged with luring husbands away from their more humdrum wives.

The wooden disc grown into the lower lip of one of these grotesque [illegible] width of six inches, while the duck-bill—produced by similar means —is frequently three inches in diam- eter. As these ornaments make it im- possible for their fair wearers to con- verse intelligibly, a suspicion other than that of jealousy promotion may be credible—even among savages the men do not encourage the women to talk overmuch!

But while the Sara-Kabba men consider the distorted mouths of these ladies most fascinating, one of their chiefs, being interviewed by a persistent scientist, confessed that [illegible] specialty of female victims.

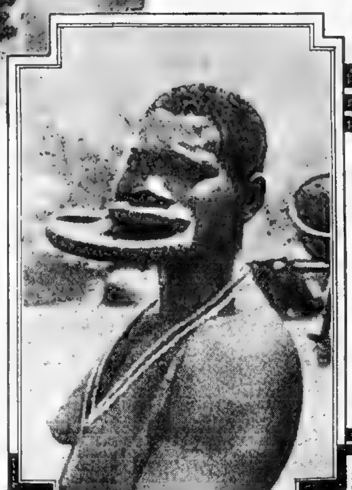
But while the Mohammedan men see nothing attractive in the duck- billed or skillet-lipped ladies, they seem to have ideas of beauty—or jealousy preventives—that proba- bly would astonish a Sara-Kabba native.

On this page, for example, is re- produced the latest portrait of a Per- sian society beauty, a lady of rank. Though the "portrait" is guaranteed, nothing short of the X-ray could re- veal a human semblance beneath those cloth wrappings. Over head and shoulders is thrown a thick, black mantle. About where the con- tour indicates that the lady's eye- brows should be a white cloth is bound round which falls in a slender triangle to where you might suspect there was a waist.

The only clue to a face, with nose and mouth and eyes, is the win- dow of coarse netting, through which you may presume that she sees and breathes.

Yet the Persians will inform you that maiden modesty alone prompts this lady to so obscure her charms— a virtue so highly prized that her husband, if she has one, and all her male relatives would not for worlds have those wrappings removed out- side of the harem's inner sanctum!

Moral: If you are a jealous hus- band keep your wife carefully tied up in [illegible]



The Skillet Lip of This Sara-Kabba Lady Causes Other Wives to Keep Their Husbands at Home.

The Japanese, an up-to-date, prac- tical race, are very frank about jeal- ousy. Whether or not they are im- mune to that passion individually, as a race they abhor and endeavor to eradicate it from all bosoms— especially female bosoms.

In their homes they hang up a most terrifying mask as a perpetual warning to their wives. The mask— represented on this page—is the Jap- anese idea of the [illegible] features of a jealous woman. The wide eyes stare horribly, the mouth is open and frightfully distorted, showing broken teeth and one horrid, overlap- ping "fang of jealousy." A horn sprouts back of each temple, and coarse, dank hair frames the whole.

If you harbor the passion of jealousy, the Japanese husband tells his wife, your beautiful face, your cherry-blossom lips will disappear forever and you will see in your mirror only the frightful mask of Hannya."

"Hannya" is the per- sonification of jealousy in Japan, but Japan being a [illegible] coun- try [illegible] is, of [illegible] a [illegible]

Now consider the stupendous fact [illegible] by this coincidence. Green eyes—did you ever see a human be- ing with green eyes? But you have seen green eyes. Where? In a cat. Where else?

Now what creature besides one of the feline species, what sole and only creature is ever called a cat? Why, an ill-tempered woman, of course. Any child could answer that ques- tion.

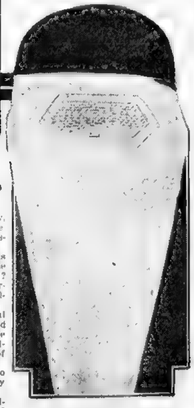
How beautifully the idea works out! What, the world over, is the chief cause of ill temper in women? It seems a shame to print the per- fectly obvious answer—why, jeal- ousy, of course.

Thus you perceive the universal appositeness of the term "green-eyed monster," used in personifying the terrible, the destructive, the corrod- ing, the largely feminine passion of jealousy.

What is jealousy? According to this authority jealousy is any lady in a bad temper!

Another curious thing about jeal- ousy—in its most emphatic and troublesome form it is an effect without a cause. Suspicion, not cer- tainty, is the chief cause of jealousy. If you are certain that the loved one is faithless, pride comes to your res- cue—or you vent your righteous wrath on the other party. Thus the whole trouble is cleared up and the incident is closed.

But if you simply suspect, then it is that you proceed, with all the stinging weapons of jealousy to make life miserable for the, prob- ably, innocent partner of your "joys."



Portrait of a Persian Society Beauty—Her Husband Is Not Jealous, Oh, No!

If you are a woman and you ask "What is jealousy?" imagine your husband or your sweetheart, firmly planted in a front seat at the Porte St. Martin Theatre, Paris, with his eyes riveted on every movement, every fascinating expression, of Mlle. Greuze. If you are at all imagina- tive, perhaps then you will under- stand what jealousy is—and will ardently desire Mlle. Greuze to be transformed into a duck-billed lady of darkest Africa.

herself in his hands, owing to the surroundings, which are entirely German, the artist speaking German and everything else German. I can- not see how the subject could be at her ease and at her best.

"The Germans are brought up to habits of obedience, and are as clay in his hands, whereas the American woman comes to us in a totally dif- ferent manner. But our enthusiasm for her beauty and our feeling that we understand and like her soon finds her interested in our work. The sitter and the artist must work to- gether. If this very important condi- tion is not arrived at the resulting negatives lacking in that most im- portant thing which the last chap- ter of every book on portraiture must close and that is expression, for without expression no portrait can be truthful or interesting, no matter how beautiful it may be in line, tones or composition.

"Many have asked us if the re- sults we obtain from the use of arti- ficial light are as wide or good as those obtained by the usual daylight. We can only point to the work we are producing, and which is mostly made under those conditions. I feel as does Mr. Rudolph Eickemeyer, the well-known artist who has charge of our sittings, that it has solved many difficulties. We do not have to de- pend on daylight, and make our sit- tings at midnight with the same ease as we go through them at mid- day. In fact, we find that our cli- entele prefer to make their appoint- ments in the evening as they are then all dressed, and do not have to go to so much trouble in making their changes of garments.

The Grand Finish of Chicago's $$$$$$$$ Bachelor Brigade

JUST AS SOON AS RICH MR. GILLETTE SAW THIS—

Founded Because a Girl Said "No"; Lasted Only Till She "Named the Day."

"The most beautiful girl in the world for him was giving those happy kiddies an automobile ride. It was Miss Brookmire."

A wretched bogey wherewith to frighten silly, marriageable maids. A gilded rabble filled with hollowness—and now it has blown up, shattered by the dynamics of its interior nothingness.

It had a narrow escape when its president "Joe" Leiter, put his bachelor head under the sharp knife of the marriage guillotine. Other successive defections covered it with ominous cicatrices. But now—oh, now!

Now its very founder, brazenly announcing his own wedding, fixed for the middle of this month, confesses that the vaunted Bachelor Brigade was conceived in fraud, born in hypocrisy, maintained in hollow mockery—all because, forsooth, the girl he wanted had "given him the mitten!"

Yes, the very minute—after ten years—Miss Cornelia Brookmire, of St. Louis, retented and named the happy day, Chicago's Beau Brummel—millionaire sportsman—first choice of match-making mammas—Howard Gillette—brazenly recanted, thus giving the Bachelor Brigade its coup de grace.

He called together the pale remnants of that organization, fed and wined them well, and then sent the Brigade to Coventry with these fatal words:

"Well, boys, it's all over with me. I'm going to be married in September. I have been in love for ten years, and only joined your beastly old brigade because the girl would not have me."

Bachelor Brigade, Requiescat in Pace!

Ten years ago Howard Gillette, fresh from his university a Beau Brummel, crack polo player, undisputed leader of millions, and a millionaire, was Chicago's chief cause of feminine heart troubles. That same year he went polo-playing at Wissahickon Heights, Philadelphia.

Riding in the park one day he saw the prettiest girl in the world for him, giving a few happy little tots an automobile drive. The kiddies, shrieking their delight, were falling all over the laughing beauty to whom they owed their treat.

Young Gillette's heart mounted to his throat and stuck there. As the automobile passed on out of sight, his mind's eye saw another vision—a sequel inspired by the conviction that he had met his fate.

A fortunate accident on the polo field brought this beauty—Miss Cornelia Brookmire, of St. Louis, educated at a Philadelphia boarding school—to his side as first aid to the injured.

Names and addresses exchanged. A brief but ardent, courtship on Gillette's part. Their parting—because she loved and was promised to another, Edward L. Wentz, a wealthy young Philadelphian.

The debut! And then, that piece of hot lowness, the Chicago Bachelor Brigade.

This engagement was to have a tragic denouement. The parental Wentzes wished their son to marry a Philadelphia girl, one of their own Assembly set. The mother at length yielded to her son's desires, but the father remained obdurate. Meantime in the Virginia mountains, at Stone Gap, young Wentz was building a ten-thousand dollar bungalow. It was near the home of his brother, Daniel Wentz, where his romance had begun two years earlier. It was to be the bride's wedding gift.

In that fatal September, when his happy fiancee was planning her trousseau, there was a long discussion between father and son. It ended in anger. The lover sent word to the waiting girl in St. Louis that they would have to marry without dad's consent. And again she refused. More unhappiness.

In October the lover went into the deep, dark Virginia woods to see how his house was progressing. October is a dull, gloomy month in those mountains. He was alone for days and nights.

In love, with every road closed, he spent tragic hours. No one but his faithful fiancee knows what he suffered. He never returned to Philadelphia. For eight months his parents had detectives and search parties going over every foot of land in the vicinity.

In May, eight months later, when the Spring flowers were carpeting the woods, a young miner living near Blackwoods went out to hunt for a lost cow. In a hollow, which had been passed hundreds of times by the searchers, he found the skeleton of the unhappy lover. He had shot himself for love.

The heartbroken parents did their best to console the stricken girl, who had hoped to the last. They found that she had never accepted a ring from her lover, and after the funeral they gave her a handsome ring. When it was too late they showered her with attentions and material things.

In a will made just before his suicide Mr. Wentz left his fiancee $100,000 and many personal belongings. The house of sorrow, which was to have been a house of happiness, he left to his mother.

This tragedy changed Miss Brookmire's life completely. She wore deep mourning and for years devoted herself to her music and philanthropy. The income derived from the legacy she spent in charity. St. Louis quite gave up any idea of her marrying.

But fate, after all, held some happiness, some brightness in store for the plucky girl. When the tragedy occurred and the hidden romance became public, Gillette was the first to offer sympathy to the girl.

They did not see each other for several years. While Miss Brookmire was grieving for her lover, and swathed in deepest black, she refused to be comforted.

One year ago he went down to St. Louis and Miss Brookmire smiled on him. A month later he went again. Miss Brookmire laughed. She lightened her mourning. He began to make weekly "business trips" to St. Louis and at last, at the end of ten years, his ardent love won the day.

And Chicago now expects to see all her bachelors become benedicts. No more will she worry about race suicide in her smart set. Eames MacVeagh, the son of the Secretary, has been elected president of the Brigade in Gillette's place, but Eames, so they say, is looking for a wife.

Several years ago, when Mrs. Pat Campbell and her fascinating daughter, Stella, were in Chicago, the handsome Eames fell desperately in love with Miss Stella. He gave twelve dinners and sixteen parties in her honor and according to rumor proposed by proxy and was rejected because he had no "soul."

How could she be sure of that? Why, once when he accompanied her to a choice performance of drama, and she turned her back on the stage the better to commune with the soul she thought he had, he was annoyed. Would a man professed to sit with her in a theatre box have a soul if he cared anything about the performance?

But handsome Eames, thirty-nine, a millionaire and altogether charming, will not long be president of the Bachelors. He is taking too much notice of the buds. And then, he has always tried to keep the pace set by his great friend, Gillette.

But what matters it? The Bachelors' Brigade was never more than a bubble anyway.

"Stella Campbell refused 'Handsome' Eames because he wanted to see the performance, though she turned her back on the stage in order to commune soulfully with him."

And I went out, crying and feeling, oh! so lonely, and so wanting somebody to comfort me."

4 The Man Who Didn't Like French Cooking

SHE liked French cooking. In ordering her household the first care of the new wife was to secure the services of a French chef, who was famous for his ways of cooking fish and the extreme lightness of his omlettes. In these two items he was supremely a master. When he came Mrs. C—— ran to announce the "good, the splendid news" to the husband. His answer was the young wife's beginning of disillusion: "Good lor," he said, "a Frenchman in this house! Now we shan't be long. But what shall we get to eat?" And he went on to say that a good plain cook, one of the sort to whom you pay twenty pounds a year, with beer money, was quite good enough for him.

After she left him she wrote: "'These things make me tired,' you used to say, and I think that you thought it a smart saying, 'give me a cut from the joint and two vegetables for my tanner.' I have seen you send back a sole a la Morny which would have done credit to little Joseph himself, with a message, sent by the butler, that when you asked for a sole you wanted it fried. One day I had ordered the chef to serve Pommes Anna at luncheon. In front of our guests you asked me what I called 'this way of serving potatoes. I call it,' you added, 'spoiling a good potato.' I asked you how then you would like the potatoes cooked, and you answered, 'In the proper way, of course.' I said, 'What do you call the proper way?' and you said 'Biled.'

"I admit that you said that word in a very funny way and that the footmen had great difficulty in keeping from a burst of laughter, but you did not mean to be funny, all the same. In your heart you did mean that you wanted your potatoes plain boiled. A thing is not necessarily good because it is plain. Conduct is not necessarily noble because it is rough and ill-mannered. A dish is not necessarily superior because it is tasteless. You seemed to think it was. I did not and do not. That is why we differ so hopelessly that a reconciliation seems quite out of the question."

5 The Woman Who Waited in Court

TO-DAY I have suffered more than I ever suffered in my life.

"I did not think it possible that such distress could come to me, directly or indirectly, from you, such distress as I have suffered this afternoon. I know you will say that I brought it upon myself, that it is I who am divorcing you. But I thought you would come, as is the custom, to talk it over with the judge and me. And then he would have asked me to forgive you, and I should have hesitated, and you would have looked at me; you would not have said anything, you would have looked at me with those big brown eyes of yours, which I used to think such faithful, dog-like eyes, and I should have forgotten everything, and I should have put up my arms, and should have said, 'Come, my Pierre.'

"I spent the time as best I could watching the different couples as they entered the judge's chambers and as they came out. Sometimes the judge seemed to have been successful, and more than one couple which had come separately went away smiling arm-in-arm. Oh! Pierre, how I longed that you might come, that the judge might scold you as you deserved to be scolded, that he might say to you: 'Monsieur, when one has a pretty, elegant little woman like Madame qui voici for a wife, one does not run after everything in petticoats that presents itself.'

"Well, I never hoped to succeed greatly. I have succeeded as much as I ever hoped. My salary is now ample for my wants, and every night at least I feel the lovely feeling of being well dressed."

6 The Woman Who Returned to Her First Love

"I was like this: We had been hunting and had retired rather early. Toward morning I heard my terrier give several little sharp yaps, and then there was silence. I turned over in bed to settle myself to sleep again, when my husband, who occupied the room next to mine, came limping into my room and asked me, in a trembling stage whisper, to go down stairs and see what 'all that infernal row was about.' He added that he could not go himself . . . his gouty toe . . .

"Well, I went. I thought to die when I saw two stealthy forms creeping along at the far end of the hall. Then a bull's eye lantern was turned on me. I stood like one paralyzed. If I could have called out to my husband I would have done so. I had no weapon. It was two village constables. They had found one of the doors open and were inspecting the premises. As I returned to my room, still shaking, I tried the handle of my husband's door. It was locked. While I was confronting the supposed burglars, he had locked himself in. And I? Well, I went into peals of laughter, which were followed by floods of tears. My husband heard my laughter and my sobbing. The next day he motored over to Harrogate. 'I can't stand your American hysterical ways, not at any price,' he scribbled on a piece of paper which he sent up to me."

The Poisoned Smile of the Mona Lisa

What Spell Did the Great Leonardo Paint Into His "Joconde" That Forces Men to Love and Steal Her and Women to Hate and Destroy Her?

By Prof. J. V. Marchand, of the Sorbonne

Paris, September 1.

IN the amazing theft of the "Mona Lisa," the greatest treasure of our great national art museum, the Louvre, we see not a mere crime but a new chapter in the psychological history of the most psychological of all pictures.

Since the brush of Leonardo da Vinci put the first stroke upon this picture it has worked havoc with the souls of countless men and women.

Leonardo was the most consummate genius the human race has produced. A scientist who foresaw the greatest discoveries of modern science, who devised a practical flying machine, who calculated the motion of the planets, and the tides before any one else had any conception of them, who understood the circulation of the blood, who invented the science of hydraulics, who anticipated the theory of optics, he was indeed superhuman. Withal he was a passionless monster. The attraction of women he regarded as peculiarly destructive to his genius.

At the height of his marvelous powers, he aimed to produce a picture which should be the supreme expression of his genius. He would steal the soul of a woman and put it on canvas. He was then the central figure of Florence, and the great art renaissance was approaching its apogee. Francesco del Giocondo, a wealthy nobleman and art patron of the city, had married as his third wife the Madonna Lisa, whose name has become immortal. It is to the family name "Giocondo" that we owe the French title "La Joconde," often given to this picture, and not to the subject's smiling expression as some people suppose.

She was an exquisitely fascinating woman perhaps she was not a good woman. Perhaps she was more sinned against than sinning. Doubtless she had suffered many sorrows and had experienced many joys. We can be certain at least she was a woman of great experience.

Leonardo set himself to transfer to canvas all that this wonderful face expressed. For the time he abandoned everything for this work. Day after day, hour after hour, he worked upon it. There is no doubt that the woman fell deeply in love with him. All the suffering she had caused to others was now more than compensated by the suffering he caused her.

He would not return her passion, but he encouraged her to show it, for it made the picture more interesting. What he desired most of all to catch was her peculiar elusive smile. When she was quite at ease in his studio, when she had settled herself into a comfortable chair, when he had said a few inspiring words to her, her face would wear this smile. He would spend hours without doing any painting until he had aroused the smile for a moment.

What this smile really means has been a subject of endless controversy. We know at least that it reflects the character of the woman, her mingled wickedness and human kindness, passion and cynicism, sensuality and sympathy.

"It is a beauty wrought out from within the flesh; the deposit, little cell by cell, of strange thoughts and fantastic reveries and exquisite passions, "says Walter Pater, the great English critic.

"She is older than the rocks, among which she sits; like the vampire she has been dead many times and learned the secrets of the grave, and has been a diver in deep seas and keeps their fallen day about her, and traficked for strange webs with Eastern merchants."

To heighten the mystery of the face he placed it against a most mysterious background. A stone balustrade separates the figure from the background. This is a fantastic, unearthly landscape, with steep, blue mountains, deep gorges, torrents, lakes and little stone bridges.

Another very wonderful feature of this picture lies in the hands. They are quite large and remarkably powerful. They actually occupy a position of exquisitely graceful repose, but yet to many eyes they appear to be on the point of reaching out and seizing some desired object.

For four years Leonardo worked upon this wonderful picture. As he painted the woman's soul into the picture, she lost her vitality. He tortured her. Her smile came less and less often, and at last not at all. The painter had stolen her soul and her life. Within a few months of its completion she died. The merciless genius had taken her life as surely as if he had stabbed her to the heart, but in death she became immortal and infinitely more fascinating than she had ever been in life.

When Leonardo had finished his masterpiece he found himself ruined and in danger of disgrace and death. His arrogance, his intrigues and his neglect of profitable work had brought him to this condition. He fled from Florence a beggar, carrying his precious picture and went to Rome and later to Milan, then in the possession of the French.

Leonardo enjoyed the protection of the French in Milan, and when Francis I., the most magnificent art patron of our race, ascended the throne, he urged the great artist to come to France. As long as it was possible to live in Italy Leonardo would not go, but eventually he was forced to accept the offer.

King Francis bought the Mona Lisa from Leonardo for a sum nominally equivalent to 12,000 francs or $2,400, but really equivalent to ten times that amount on account of the change in purchasing power of money. Leonardo, however, stipulated that he should not give up the picture as long as he lived.

He died in the arms of the King, according to tradition. That was in 1519.

The fatal picture then came into the possession of the King. It hung for some time in one of the country chateaux of Francis I. was removed by Louis XIV. to Versailles and at the Revolution was placed in the Louvre, where it remained until some misguided person removed it the other day.

During all these centuries it has continued to exercise a fatal attraction over the minds of men and women, and this influence appears to be stronger to-day than ever before. It seems that all the tragedies and passions that have centred upon it have lent it cumulative power over the emotions of those who behold it.

To the man the face of Mona Lisa appears to be alluring him with intoxicating smile to go upon a journey into that mysterious background, the like of which mortal senses have never yet known.

To the woman the face appears to wear a mocking smile, suggesting that any man would desert her for the delights that Mona Lisa offers and that the mysterious background is one into which no woman may hope to enter.

The Mona Lisa has figured in many of the tragedies in the French royal family. It was the attraction she exercised over Louis XVI. and the aversion she aroused in Marie Antoinette that led to the early estrangement between the pair, driving the Queen into the extravagances and eccentricities that caused her unpopularity and final downfall.

Since the picture has been on public exhibition it has led to countless tragedies, suicides and strange episodes. Thousands of love letters written by men in the most fantastic and passionate language have been cast at the feet of the picture.

There is a widespread belief in France that at night the wondrous hands of Mona Lisa reach forth and embrace the fortunate man who is there at the psychological moment. In the dark winter months there was always some man lingering at evening before the picture with his wild hope in his mind.

Three years ago Mademoiselle Henriette de Caumont, a Frenchwoman of good family, made a spring at the picture, in spite of the two guardians stationed before it, and succeeded in inflicting a slight slash with a pair of scissors in the lower right hand corner. After her arrest it was learnt that her lover had deserted her on the eve of marriage and she believed that Mona Lisa had stolen him from her.

A very strange fact revealed after the [illegible] of the picture was that the official photographer of the gallery had [illegible] on in the [illegible] of taking it to his studio [illegible] many years past, and photographing it over and over again, hundreds of times for the pure joy of the action.

The extraordinary emotions aroused by the picture as shown by this and other episodes, its long history of tragedy and mystery naturally gave ground for the belief that it had not been stolen by a common criminal. It must have been obvious to any one that it could not be sold, and the probability that it could be used [illegible] as a means of blackmailing [illegible] very slight. To the psychol[illegible]

"For centuries the mysterious smile of Mona Lisa has aroused the passion of love in man and the passion of hate in women. Thousands believe that the marvellous hands of the picture stretch fort at night to clasp the object of their desire."

Showing the New Wide Ste[illegible]
and Large Flat Muff. The [illegible]
Cut at the Feet to Show [illegible]
of the Skirt in [illegible]
Wider Lines.

My New Fashions That I Like Best—And Why.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile").

Paris, Sept

HERE I am showing you some advance models of my new fashions. Later, I hope to show you some other very beautiful ones.

You will notice that in almost every case the skirts are wider and fuller, but that they lose none of the graceful clinging lines that I love so well. Notice, too, the enormous wide stoles and the great muffs. The muffs are even larger than ever. I am draping my stoles across the breast, letting them fall in graceful lines along the costume.

A fur is an absolute part of a toilette. No woman who wishes to be artistic and completely dressed can ignore color, shape, texture and the general effect of her furs in connection with the costume she is wearing. The dress and furs should make one perfect whole.

Of course, it is not possible for every one to have a set of furs for every dress, but there is a general harmonization which can be gained by the skilful combination of different furs. And here is one of the new Fall novelties in furs, and one which

I think will become a permanent mode—the interweaving of various furs, otter, ermine, fox, opossum in stole and muff, hat and dress trimming.

I like the costume—the large fur—and I shown a large set of opossum fur which is worn with a huge black fox muff. The muff is trimmed with gold [illegible] tache, and a black band to match muff adorns it. The hem of the dress is trimmed with opossum, and the sleeves carry the same note.

In the ermine set you see a new muff called the "pocket muff," and an extremely wide scarf, which, however, is short and thrown loosely over the left shoulder.

The fur set I show here with the quaint large rounds of molefkin is the dernier cri of Paris. The rounds are set upon chiffon. Both are moleskin color. Here we have not only the wide scarf, but the enormous long one.

I love color, and the Orient is full of it. I go to the Orient for many of my dreams. Here is a creation of which I am fond [illegible] which I brought back from there. It is a fine coat of [illegible] gold cloth lined [illegible] tiger and beige and [illegible] and old gold colorings are [illegible] which to the fore, and deservedly so, for they are distinctly smart; and grays, too, seem to be at their best this season.

These are, of course, just the [illegible] fabrics, but also—and consequently—they are just [illegible] which will be in earliest and [illegible] general demand.

The morning gown of brown velveteen embroidered in soft color is one of my ideals of line. But then it doesn't matter to me whether every French dressmaker should come out for crinolines; I would still make these lines, and women would be beautiful in them.

The little black chiffon evening gown that you see at the right of the page is adorned with changeable sequins. The waist is embroidered with diamonds, and the back hangs [illegible] from the shoulders. The [illegible] is of the most delicate [illegible]-colored pink silk. It is daring, I know, but it is also, I think, very beautiful.

I have spoken in another column [illegible] reversible fabrics. Besides these the most popular materials [illegible] velveteen and velvet [illegible] are going to be the most [illegible] fabrics.

The latest colorings in some shrunk frieze are altogether and exceptionally beautiful, as are also those which are being shown in basket cloth, and in both cases each and every shade can be faithfully matched by the knitted woollen or silk coats, which are perennially popular for sporting purposes, and which will before long be in still greater demand when ski-ing is added to the list of these sports.

Skirts made in such cloths or friezes are always more satisfactory than any of the knitted varieties, which inevitably and unpleasantly tend to cling and to sag, and which can never achieve the true smartness of these tailored creations.

There are some vivid shades of scarlet and green, which only the daring few will ever consider, or at any rate adopt, but, on the other hand, there is a certain tone of geranium red which will make quite a delightful bit of color, and half a dozen different and deepening nuances of green borrowed direct from Saturn, who never once wearies [illegible] with any of her myriad [illegible] of leafy green.

Your Fashi For Fall.

Lady Duff-Gordon Describes Her Newest, Exclusive Autumn Modes.

WHAT are to be the fashions this Fall? Are the skirts still to be narrow or are they to be wider? Will women go back to the wide sleeves, as has been hinted? What is it that the masters of dress have locked up in their closets, ready to surprise womankind this Fall?

Here Lady Duff-Gordon, the famous "Lucile" of New York, Paris and London, shows some of her newest, exclusive Autumn modes, not only describing her season's surprises, but also revealing the secrets of the Paris dressmakers.

Lady Duff-Gordon writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in fashions for fastidious women and illustrating it with sketches and photographs from her New York, London and Paris establishments. Her new Paris house brings her in closest touch with that fashion centre. Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York City.

Why the Orient Us More Than E

YES, it is true, as any close observer that in our costuming we are co and more under the influence of Eas Not in extremes, however, as might seem in one recent effort to progress from the ha to actual Turkish trousers! The inf subtler, relating more to color schemes, s textures, a more natural following of the the figure and to the characteristically Or fulness of embroidery.

For the head, the turban spreads its in all sorts of materials, close-fitting straw sh having unmistakably a turban ancestry fect, low-cut slippers, embroidered in rich color, color everywhere.

As I have said before, the Oriental to plements itself in gloves, parasol, stock everything.

In my new Fall models pictured in the you will have noted in the choice of embroi the method of applying it; in the diaphanou of overskirt material; in the unconventi apparently careless draping of the skirt at and in the softening of all lines of the fig powerfully the truly artistic side of Oriental costuming appeals to w fashion and of good taste.

Indeed, there is a good and sufficient reason for this. That re in the permanency of the general features of Oriental dress through centuries. Those born lovers of what pleases the eye seem long have reached a point where further improvement failed to sugge If you buy a Chinese, Japanese, East Indian or Persian robe several years old you will find that it is in colors, cut and embroidery virt same as the robes of to-day in those countries.

It is only in the turmoil of the younger and untried nations th a constant change in the foundation of things, of which, naturally is one; for is not woman one of the two fundamental things, a fashion the very closest part of her?

It is, of course, appropriate that the Oriental note is most evident gowns, in all gowns exclusively for indoor wear—for the Oriental n never an out-door woman; when she adorns herself it is to find favo eyes of her lord in the most sacred precincts of the Oriental home.

Thus, for women, the Orient has not developed, as we have, schemes for the street and for other public places. Yet, in walkin even, we can give just a touch of the ruling influence of the East in broidery and in the sleeves and the coat.

It is obvious that the Oriental touch must actually reach to t Any superabundance of underclothing is fatal to the beauty of fabrics worn above them. Accordingly, as I have repeatedly urged, scantiest of undergarments should be—and are being—worn. The tights and silk drawers.

Not only have these things come to pass in the dress of all w true taste in dress, but in most of the large cities of the world humble working girl has learned to disdain all "bargains" in cost lack the wide-spreading suggestion from Oriental lands.

The Oriental touch has always appealed intensely to me. The of ages seems to linger in each line and color, crying out against ness of our modern outline. Crinolines and Flounces Are Creeping Back; Inside-Outside Gowns to Be the Rage in Paris.

NO Sultan ever guarded the beauties of his harem with such jealousy as the Paris dressmakers guard the secrets of their new modes until the moment when all flash out together before the women of the great capital. Each is so afraid that some little idea or some little invention will be stolen. This is one of the disadvantages of having a particular mode. Fashion should be universal. When, as I have often exclaimed, will womankind [illegible] is made only to enhance [illegible] cover a defect! Dre[illegible] women, not women for dr[illegible]

Yet some of the new Paris modes will show actually a return to crinolines and flounces! Not, of course, the enormous flounced pyramids of our grandmothers, but considerably more than a suggestion. Some of them have, I am given to understand, gone to the other extreme, and their crinolines will make many rub their eyes. The corsetless gown will be a feature of the season—and this will be sad news to many whose figures have always known the corset.

The wide sleeve—the actual crinoline sleeve, with its band of steel holding out the fabric—I have described in a previous article. I cannot tell where the revolution will take us, and I would not be surprised to see many startlingly wide crinolines this Fall.

All the skirts, however, will be a trifle wider. Still, I am convinced that if the crinoline does come out its lease of [illegible] will be even shorter than was that of the harem skirt. No woman who has known the grace and comfort of the close fitting skirts wants to [illegible]ack to those cumbrous times when we were only absurd tops

As to coat and skirt costumes, the plainer fabrics usually associated with tailor-mades are to be reinforced —not to say rivalled—by many more fanciful fabrics—rich silks and satins and oddly patterned brocades.

But above and beyond all there is going to be a veritable rage for reversible fabrics —and [illegible] woman [illegible]

Perhaps [illegible] most ex[illegible] satin cl[illegible] old rose. T[illegible]

[illegible] an ar- [illegible] rought [illegible] end in [illegible]n meetlare. So one has in [illegible] but one gown for travel [illegible] new gown when they [illegible]ir freshest!

[illegible] the fashionable fever, and, [illegible]wardly they [illegible] still be of the quietest gray and herr[illegible] patterning, they will on their insides display a distinct and decorative plaid, whose stripes will be, say, mauve and tawny tiger twills together on a background of gray. There will be models of blue serge to be made daintily attractive, to say nothing of expensive, by the reverse being various tartans, the blue and green [illegible]ds being one of the most effective combina[illegible]

[illegible]nally I foresee the greatest possibilities of [illegible] another and certain reversible suiting, which has the smart simplicity of dark gray, patterned with line stripes in black, which are a quarter of an inch apart, and then you have but to turn the dress, and presto! all its masculine and smart simplicity gives place to the most feminine and fashionable dress of passion flower purple, emerald green and gold!

Another change in the mode that delights me is the increasing unpopularity of the corset and the use of one's own hair instead of the false.

A great many of the Paris gowns will be designed with an [illegible] to the absolute abolition of the corset. I do away with the corset as much as possible, and this piling on of false hair that the last few seasons has seen has not only been unlovely but unhygienic. The deeply turned down collar will be in vogue. The most popular is formed of alternate stripes [illegible] Cluny and Val. laces, the latter lace being chosen for its final edgings, while to fasten it there is a bow of china silk with a device of blurred flowers—pink and blue and mauve.

The Mystery of the Dancing Dervishes

An American Describes the Feats of the Hideous Arab Fanatics Who Carry Live Coals in Their Mouths, Dance on the Bodies of Babies Without Hurting Them and Whirl Themselves to Death

Captive Dervishes Being Taken to Algiers by Native French Troops.

The Sand Fortune Teller—Another Desert Mystery.

EDWARD MORANGE, the distinguished artist who accompanied the Thorn Expedition to Alaska last year, being appointed by the Government to make sketches, has returned from a visit to the scenes of Hichens' powerful novel "The Garden of Allah." Mr. Morange accompanied Mr. George C. Tyler, of the New Theatre, and Hugh Ford, the stage director of that theatre, to study the conditions of life in the Garden of Allah, the poetic name the Arabs have given to the Desert of Sahara.

What most impressed Mr. Morange in the journey through the mystic East was the strange, wild dances of the dervishes, the half-mad priests of Islam. The story of the whirling dances, the seeming miracles ending in a swoon, Mr. Morange has given, as follows, to this newspaper.

By Edward Morange.

WHILE all of the atmosphere, and the strange events of our journey through northern Africa, have the participator wondering whether after all, he has not suddenly awakened from a nap after reading some dream-provoking "Arabian Nights," the weirdest memory of all is that of the dervishes in their wild dances in the Mosque at Bakral.

Bakral is one of the oasis towns encountered in the journey between Algiers and Tunis. We arrived there the first day out away from Algiers. There Robert Hichens met us. He had come from Rome to meet us and take us about the scenes of the book which Mr. George Tyler has had dramatized and will produce at the New Theatre.

It was Mr. Hichens who was our guide to the Mosque and who secured for us a sight seldom granted to unbelieving American and European eyes, the mystery of the dancing dervishes at worship.

Self-sacrifice to the dancing dervishes means violent exercise ending in a swoon, and sometimes death. The ecstatic torture of the flesh they believe to be pleasing to Mahomet. They grudge no measure of the sacrifice.

A guide, swathed in the white robes of the Arab, and silent as are they all in the shadow of the Mosque, beckoned us, and we followed him to another door and into the inner temple, a room as large as the first, but empty of all save human furnishings. On one side crouched the musicians, men squatting gravely at their tasks of beating drums held high in air, or sending wild, shrill notes through small flutes, held in brown, hairy, slender hands. Across the room stood a dozen figures, so silent, so bronze that they might have been mistaken for statues. Naked save for white clouts worn about their middle and for white turbans wrapped in many folds about their heads, they stood with arms folded and eyes closed, waiting.

"They," Mr. Hichens whispered, "are the dervishes. You have seen them about the streets of Bakral, wrapped in white and looking like any other Arabs. Now, you see, their faces are transformed."

It was true. A dreamlike beauty had fallen veil-like upon their faces. Expressions that had been sullen now seemed rapt and spiritual.

At last the persistent beats of the tom-toms ended. In the pause which followed the flutist lifted his instrument high and blew upon it a long, soft, plaintive call, like the cry of the muezzin at twilight, summoning all who heard to prayer. That long note was the signal for an utter change in the waiting bronze figures.

The dream-like expressions vanished in an instant. Closed eyes opened. About the gloom of the Mosque wild glances shot. Folded arms dropped. Through the long, slim, hitherto motionless bodies slight shudders passed, as waves ripple the waters of an autumn pool. The tom-toms joined the flute in a wild strain.

At once it became apparent why they are called the whirling dervishes. While the tom-toms sounded their hoarse, war-like notes, the flute sounded through them like a shrill cry of a woman. The sound seemed to make the dervishes frantic. They flew round and round, spinning like tops.

In a corner of the room near the musicians was a red glow, from which curled up a spiral gray flame. To my horror three of the dancers whirled to the brazier, stooped swiftly as a hawk swoops from the sky, gathered the red coals in their thin brown hands and shifted them into their mouths. I know they did this, for standing within two feet of one of the dancers I saw the red hot coal upon his tongue. I saw it plainly and would take an oath upon it any time or place. The sight unnerved me. It turned me weak. Yet so fascinated was I by the horrible sight that I had no thought of leaving the room.

The dance grew madder and madder. The dervishes stopped their whirling to bound high into the air. Several world-leading trapeze artists are lost to the world by the immolation of these desert priests upon the altar of their strange religion.

I shuddered more than did the priests at the overture to their dance, for their leaps were bringing them in a fighting circle about the smouldering brazier. Cries came from the brown men struggling for their blazing prizes. The group broke up and whirled back to the center of the room. In the right hand of each was a fiery coal. The sickening realization of this was followed by a more hideous sight. For each man, laughing maniacally, leaned down and stroked his brown legs with the living fire. Having done this they thrust the coal beneath their arms and held it there, crushed into the armpit.

But this not for a moment interfered with the dance. The whirling, leaping, crazy steps went on. The tom-toms pleaded, scolded, whipped into greater endeavor. The dancers swung round to another corner farthest from the musicians and seized long sword-like pins. They caught the nape of their own necks with their left hand and with the right stabbed the skin and flesh with the little daggers, spearing them through, letting them remain there, the ends showing a full dagger length from the hilt. They thrust the pins through their noses, through their ears. They pulled down their eyelids until they lay upon their cheeks, and thrust the pins through these. They looked like whirling pincushions. On one I counted eight pins in the face and head and neck.

Into the gloom of the temple slipped Arabs carrying live babes in their arms. The babes partook of the stolidness of the inhabitants of the desert. They looked with dark, inscrutable eyes at the dancing madmen, who snatched them from the arms of guides and placed them upon the floor. But no sound was uttered by one of the infants.

The dervishes danced about them as sword dancers manœuvre about a sword lying upon the floor. Presently some of the frantic priests danced upon bodies of the infants, their brown feet sinking into the soft stomachs. Yet not one baby cried!

We beheld these horrors as long as they lasted, two hours, until each of the dozen men had sunk exhausted. The hoarse notes of the tom-toms ceased. From a rear door of the temple came white robed native physicians, who lifted the insensible priests into their arms or dragged them across the marble floors into the room where they were to be restored to consciousness or their eyes were to be finally closed in death.

The babies, crowing and laughing, without a sign of harm, were taken away. Yet I had seen these men dance upon them.

This is the mystery of the dancing dervishes as we saw it. The solution of the mystery? It lies, the French and German scientists, whom I met at Bakral, at Algiers and Tunis, tell me, in self hypnotism. They say that by auto suggestion these priests raise themselves to a state of freedom from suffering.

The mind, these wise men say, the dervishes are able to free from its bondage to the body, and, said one, an eminent German doctor, "Every one knows that the real seat of pain is the mind. If the mind is away on a visit, or if it refuses to recognize pain there is no pain. That is the secret."

"And the babies, they danced upon?" I asked.

The Girl Who Inspires Rodin

Rodin's Portrait Bust of the Marquise de Choiseul—Which Started Their Remarkable Friendship.

Mme. Rodin, the Old Peasant Wife of the Great Sculptor Who is Devoted to His Friend the Marquise.

Paris, Sept. 5

AUGUSTE RODIN, greatest of modern sculptors, has "performed the impossible." The same words were used when Victor Hugo buried the French classical drama out of sight under the new power and beauty of his romantic masterpieces.

Rodin, with his poetic conceptions and his illusion of realism, in execution has done for French sculpture what Hugo did for French drama—a task of equal difficulty and importance.

How has Rodin, in hardly more than half a dozen years of celebrity, made his victory complete—Rodin, peasant born [illegible] lifetime unnoticed—when ex[illegible] unremitting warfare thro[illegible] [illegible] triumph?

[illegible] answer [illegible] Rodin, in [illegible] the shatterer of [illegible] as a cla[illegible] tion. In youth [illegible] seems a girl [illegible] woman of fashion [illegible] the sacrifice of her [illegible] tions, so [illegible] tions she surrounds Ro[illegible] the man no less than Rodin the sculptor with the atmosphere of her protecting influence and the inspiration of her enthusiasm.

Hardly a day passes that her carriage is not seen waiting before the door of Rodin [illegible] the Rue de Varenne [illegible] armorial bearings are those of the Marquise de Choiseul, formerly Miss Claire Coudert, of New York.

This association is one that charms Parisians, for they declare it to be one of the most interesting and remarkable friendships in history. It dates from the time that the Marquise sat to Rodin for her portrait bust four or five years ago and nearly every day since then she has been with the great man watching over him, encouraging him and inspiring him.

The friendship between the two—the old white-haired genius and the beautiful woman of half his age—is one of the most exquisite spectacles in the Paris art and social world—purely platonic and intellectual.

Rodin's wife is an old, old peasant woman, who sits all day long in her little cap and shoulder shawl and knits or sews. She has never advanced a step along the wonderful way that her husband has gone. Yet he is deeply devoted to this little old peasant wife and gives her the tenderest love, though she in no wise appreciates or understands her husband's genius.

She is glad that he is successful and that they have plenty of money to bring every comfort to them in their old age.

The Rodins live at Meudon on the Seine, where he has his workshop studio, the other two being in Paris. At Meudon they have a simple, charming villa, with a beautiful garden. It seems like a palace to the little, old peasant wife, and she is very happy there, for she has always had the tender love of a great-souled man.

Though Rodin is more than seventy years old, he is more inspired now than ever, owing [illegible] with th[illegible] powers, to [illegible] duties that are [illegible] one who kn[illegible] or revere[illegible] devotion to the [illegible] ure, so uplifting [illegible] selfish and impe[illegible] remarkably fine [illegible] and it is the [illegible] that she wo[illegible] whole life to [illegible]

To handle such minute quantities requires the employment of the most delicate balances and apparatus. A very ingenious scale is used with which a thousandth part of a milligram may be weighed. A thousandth part of a milligram is equivalent to about a sixty-six thousandth of a grain. It is impossible, of course, to see such a minute quantity with the naked eye and powerful microscopes have to be used in connection with the balance.

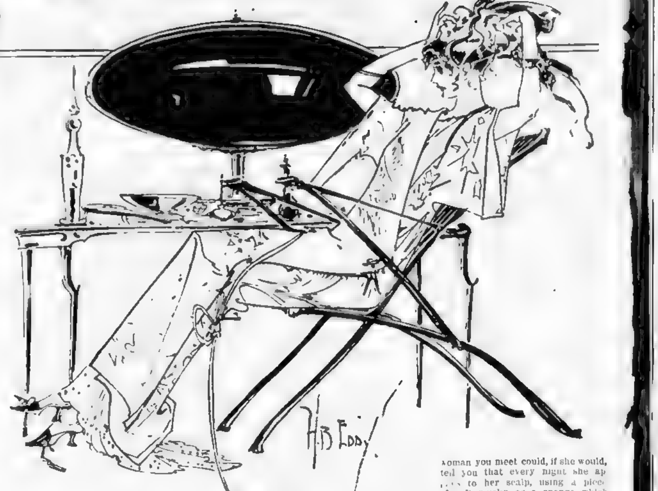
My Secrets of Beauty—No. 141

To Save Falling Hair—

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the Most Famous Living Beauty.



"Pour warm, soapy water over the parts in the hair, and rub the palms and fingers."

TO what extent thinning hair hair is a cause for anxiety is taken up to-day by Mme. Cavalieri and discussed in her usual thorough manner. She fixes the danger mark and tells what is a natural and unalarming loss of the hair. She tells how loss of hair may be prevented and how once begun it may be checked. The page contains many valuable formulae.

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri

AT this season there is anxiety ... the minds, in ... also, a ... There is a proverb ... peasants of the Pyre... poetic truth in ...

... hair should fall because it must fall to be replaced, and there is practically an entire new growth of hair every three years. That there should be a special fall of hair in the Au... ...mn is due to the fact that Summer is a most trying season to the hair, despite the fact that at the seashore and in the mountains, or on the farms, even on transatlantic ... there is more chance ... ... its needed ventilation. Dust is a deadly enemy of the hair, and, with the exception of the steamships, the places of which I have spoken have a great deal of dust in circulation. Travel on trains and by automobiles is another source of much dust.

But, though these are all causes of the undue falling of hair ... many authorities ... to be a microbe. This microbe must be destroyed, else the hair will be ... In other words, the scalp requires a disinfectant. Different preparations of pitch, physicians and trained nurses will tell you, are among the best disinfectants. For this reason the tar soap is preferred by some specialists for shampooing persons who complain of falling hair.

"Keep the comb free from dust by dipping it often in ammonit-softened water."

Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

Shave half of a small cake of the tar soap into a pitcher or jar of water. Pour over it a pint of boiling water. Shake this well and let it stand long enough to dissolve. Pour this over the scalp and rub it well into the scalp among the roots of the hair. Then pour over the hair alternately warm and cool water. This can be poured on either with a pitcher or with a spray or shower. Keep on rinsing the hair until, to use the common but sufficient expression, the "water runs clean." Then dry the hair entirely by towelling it. I am opposed to the use either of the fan or funnel, for the fan cools the head too quickly, causing the person to catch cold, and the funnel warms the head, causing the hair to dry too quickly and become brittle.

When the hair is partially dried, or, if preferred, after it is fully dried, rub into the scalp with a brush or bit of cotton this mixture:

Glycerine, one-third ounce.

An authority advises following this treatment by rubbing into the scalp as much naptholized alcohol as it will absorb.

This very valuable treatment for falling hair has three steps, first the shampoo to cleanse the scalp, and in a measure disinfect it. Second, ... to ... nfect it: that is, de... the microbe. Third, the use of naptholized alcohol to strengthen it. If the scalp and hair have a tendency to dryness this three-step treatment may be folowed by a ... rth, which includes an oil to moisten and soften the hard scalp. Of such lotions this is one of the best:

Salicylic acid, one dram.
Alcohol, four ounces.
Bay rum, three ounces.

Three or four such thorough treatments combined with daily massaging of the head should stop the loss of hair, provided the health is unimpaired. For you have only to notice the coat of a horse that is in good physical condition, and one that is ill, to realize that the condition of the hair is an infallible index of the health. The coat of the horse that is well is sleek, shining and thick. That of the ailing horse is rough, uneven and in spots thin or missing.

Englishwomen have fine, and, as a rule, very long hair. They rely greatly upon the tonic value of rosemary. They sprinkle a little of rosemary into the shampoo water, a dozen drops into a bowl of water.

But if the hair is falling they give it daily rosemary treatment. For instance, now when the effect of the attendant dust of their Summer tours of the Continent is showing in falling hair, nearly every English woman you meet could, if she would, tell you that every night she applies to her scalp, using a piece of soft muslin or a sponge which they throw away after once using because they know that sponges harbor and prepare a wonderful breeding place for microbes, a decoction of rosemary leaves made thus:

Let the water come to a boil. Then take it off the fire. Place on the back of the stove and let "draw" for six hours. Each night before retiring pour the liquid into a saucer and drop into it a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda. Let the soda dissolve. Then dampen the roots of the hair with the liquid, afterward gently massaging the scalp.

There is reason for the general English belief that this treatment strengthens the roots of the hair.

Oil of sweet almonds, 100 grams.
Alcohol, 30 grams.
Oil of thyme, 15 grams.

Spanish women are famous for their beautiful hair. To have thin hair is in Spain a synonym for ugliness. Therefore does a fair Spaniard most sedulously guard her hair. When it begins to fall she massages into it a liquid made of

Water, one quart.

Pour boiling water over the cocoa shells and let them steep for three hours. Before dressing their hair each morning they dampen the scalp with this decoction.

Many requests come for a formula for pilocarpine lotions which, you recall, I told you were the favorite among the hair specialists of Paris. This of Gilbert and Yvon is highly esteemed by authorities on hair culture:

Ntirate of pilocarpine, 25 centigrams.

Balsam of Peru, 5 grams.

Vinegar, one teacupful.

The Food that Genius is Fed Upon.

How the Wives of Famous Writers Prepare the Dishes Their Husbands Like Best

GENIUS has its favorite dishes the same as mediocrity. Maurice Maeterlinck, the famous Belgian writer and philosopher, finds his deepest delight, while people in cafés and restaurants find the chief joy of romance in the bread of Maeterlinck.

And that literary genius is particularly fond of bread what it eats. Many of the most popular writers are fond of their stomachs. As a rule they eat, but they are great fasters.

Their favorite dishes of twelve of these literary lights are known to make them are here given. Many of the dishes are invented by the writers' wives and many of them as to be practically original formulas.

MADAME MAETERLINCK [illegible] and is a famous [illegible] dish. It sounds very poetic or romantic, and Maeterlinck's favorite dish is [illegible] is famous all [illegible] husband is said [illegible] to judge in this commonplace dish [illegible] which his charming [illegible] shaped tripe.

The tripe is cut in half-inch strips, a layer of these strips is laid in the bottom of an oiled baking dish and sprinkled with salt and pepper, then a layer of grated Parmesan cheese is added and this is covered in turn with tomato sauce. Layer after layer like this is laid until the dish is filled, then on top a thick covering of well buttered bread crumbs, and it is baked brown.

Anthony Hope Hawkins, [illegible] wife-author of the "Prisoner of Zenda," American girl, Elizabeth Sheldon [illegible] gifted husband is very fond of [illegible] dishes that she frequently prepares. One of these is lobster a la [illegible] which Mrs. Hawkins makes [illegible]

Take one large lobster, a pint of sweet thick cream, a tablespoonful of butter, three tablespoonfuls of sherry and two tablespoonfuls of flour. Boil the lobster for fifteen minutes. Pick out the meat and cut into small pieces. Pour over it the cream and add the butter, which has been sufficiently melted to mix well with the flour. Warm the whole over the fire and stir constantly. When [illegible] well blended and smooth and creamy add the sherry. This is best made in a chafing dish.

Miss Hamlin Garland is the constant [illegible] son of her gifted husband. [illegible] is a beautiful woman and is highly cultivated and talented, having exhibited sculptures at the Paris Salon. Miss Zolin, daughter of Chas. [illegible] Paris, and is also fond of making [illegible] she devises all kinds of dish [illegible]

Her recipe is that of maple [illegible]

Mix into one and one-half cupfuls of sifted flour three level teaspoonfuls of baking powder and half a teaspoonful of salt. Then rub into this three tablespoonfuls of butter and mix with a little over half a cup of sweet milk. Roll this out thin and spread thickly with grated maple sugar, roll up like a jelly roll and bake in a quick oven. It should be served hot.

Former Mrs. Richard Le Gallienne [illegible] her marriage was a brilliant writer [illegible] She was Julie Norregard, a Danish [illegible] After her marriage she ceased to [illegible]

Mr. Le Gallienne was vegetarian [illegible] no flesh food, but Mrs. Le Gallienne concocted the most delicious dishes [illegible] meat. One of these is mock [illegible] as follows:

Take fruits which have been well boiled and form into a pulp by straining through a colander. Add to a cupful of this a cup of gluten flour, a cup of walnuts and pecan meat, half a cup of sterilized strained tomatoes, two spoonfuls of grated carrot, salt and sugar.

Put these into [illegible] cheese" round carefully cleaned skewers. Dip in bread crumbs and place on broad tins for twenty minutes in a medium fire. Serve with baked tomatoes and mayonnaise dressing.

Mrs. Stewart Edward White is a very [illegible] young lady, not only [illegible] but in nature as well. She has a [illegible] and an [illegible] found a [illegible] writer of delightful novels [illegible] understanding of the great wild [illegible] this in one so young and [illegible]

A number of her favorite recipes, [illegible] Bananas in syrup: Most in an examined kettle a cupful of currant jelly and a cupful of raspberry jelly, sweetened to taste. When the jelly comes to a boil, drop into it ten or twelve bananas, peeled and slightly scraped. The red ones are to be preferred. Let them simmer in the syrup for about twenty minutes. Remove the bananas carefully and then boil the syrup until quite thick, pour over the bananas and serve with whipped cream and a few sun-dried Maraschino cherries. This is pretty to look at as well as delicious to the taste.

Mrs. Booth Tarkington is [illegible] to world over. She [illegible] of [illegible] girl. One of [illegible] specialties is a delicious Swiss rarebit, made in a chafing dish.

To a third of a cup of mashed potatoes add two-thirds of lentil pulp, half a cup of cream, a grated onion, a few sticks of grated celery and pepper and salt to taste. Mix well together and spread a thick layer of nut butter over the top and bake brown.

Mrs. W. B. Jacobs is a very pretty English woman and has what [illegible] of country women are [illegible] sed with a keen sense of humor, and to this she owes her marriage to Mr. Jacobs.

She and her husband are both very fond of Scotch haggis, which she has made as follows:

Boil the heart and the tongue of a sheep and a piece of the liver. When cold mince it very fine. Grate also a teacupful of the liver, and add to this a teacupful of coarse oatmeal and half a pound of suet finely chopped, one tablespoonful of black pepper, one tablespoonful of salt and three finely chopped onions. Mix all well together, and boil for hours in a pudding basin, covering the top with paste, the same as for a beefsteak pudding. Serve the haggis very hot.

Mrs. Jerome K. Jerome is of Spanish birth, the daughter of Lieutenant Nesza, [illegible] of the Spanish Army, and was married to Mr. Jerome in [illegible] as a very witty [illegible] elegant woman and is most congenial to her famous husband.

Mr. Jerome is extravagantly fond of his charming wife's Spanish recipes, one of which is egg chowder, made in this fashion:

Place in a porcelain kettle two tablespoonfuls of olive oil, and when hot add a cupful and a half of sliced potatoes and a sliced onion with half a cupful of Spanish peppers. Add salt and pepper and a pint of water, boil until the sliced potatoes are soft, then add a pint of sweet milk, and when it comes to a boil add three eggs which have had the yolks and whites beaten separately. Let remain but one minute over fire after the eggs are added. Then set well back on the stove.

Take two pounds of fresh, raw pork; cut into pieces size of a walnut. Season with salt and pepper and two glasses of diluted vinegar. Let it steep one hour; and turn it once in ten minutes. Have one pound of good sausage meat. Line your little pie mould sides and bottom, put a thin layer of sausage on the bottom, then pork, then sausage, then pork, and finish with sausage. Wet the edge of the pie, roll cover to fit, cut hole in centre and pinch the two edges [illegible]
